Tobar na Seisrighe, well of the ploughland.

Tobernasheshry -- J. O'D.

The Plough Well (Eng.) -- Inhabitants

Situated in the N.W. part of the td. of Rathjordan and also E. of the Glebe.

This is a spring well, about 4 feet wide, and placed in a green field. It is a legend, maintained by the natives, that as men were in the act of ploughing in this field formerly they together with the horse and plough were swallowed in that spot, after which this well sprang up and was called as above.

Rathjordan Church -- Inhabitants 6
-- J. O'D.

Situated in the Glebe of Rathjordan and on the middle of the west boundary thereof.

This church or graveyard is about 2 chains long and 1½ chains broad, with a small ruin in its centre, nearly level with the ground.

John the Baptist's Well -- Inhabitants 7

St. John the Baptist's Well -- J. O'D.

Tobar Eoin Bhaide -- Inhabitants

Situated near the middle of the west part of the td. of Rathjordan, a little west of Rathjordan Glebe and Church.

This is a spring well, about 3 feet wide. It is held sacred by the natives, and stations are generally performed at it on the eves of Sundays, also on the anniversary of the Saint, the 24th June. There is, however, no pattern held at it.

Caogh Y Dhu

-- Inhabitants

8

Cae Dubh, black quagmire.

Kaeduff

-- J. O'D.

Situated on the west side of the td. of Rathjordan, and forms the boundary between the phs. of Rathjordan and Caherelly.

This is a stream, about 12 feet wide. It rises at the west side of the td. of Doonvullen (Ph. of Ballybrood), runs south and falls into the River Commogue.
