Mr. Adderly reported from the Committee the heads of a bill to enact English ſtatutes, where the kingdom of Ireland and Great Britain enjoyed equal benefit and equal reſtraints.

Mr. Ogle ſaid, he accorded in every ſenſe with thinking the tendency of the bill advantageous to this kingdom.

Mr. Conolly declared he had for a ſeries of years reſiſted a declaration of rights, but he now acknowledged himſelf on the ſame ſentiments with the gentlemen who had ſpoke laſt.

Mr. Hartley oppoſed that clauſe in the heads, which was abſolutely calculated to overturn a very material part of the bankrupt law. He ſhould therefore, on that account, oppoſe that clauſe of the bill which ſeemed to affect any part of the bankrupt act.

He was replied to by Mr. Dawſon, who ſaid he had guarded againſt any advantages which could be taken in the framing of the bill.

He was ſeconded in this by Mr. Forteſcue and Mr. Gamble, who expatiated upon the cruelty of keeping thoſe in actual cuſtody from the benefits of their liberty and the enjoyment of induſtry and ſociety.

It was agreed that the bill ſhould be read through, and when they came to the blank for aſcertaining a day from which the benefit of the act ſhould commence, after ſome converſation the 25th of March, 1782, was agreed on for thoſe who had ſince that time remained in cuſtody, without being any ways enlarged by the gaolers

The heads being gone through, Mr. Annesley moved, that the chairman ſhould leave the chair, whereupon a diviſion enſued, and there appeared for the motion.

Reſolved, That as FREEMEN, CITIZENS, and VOLUNTEERS, we are firmly and unalterably determined, that we will, individually, and collectively, exert our moſt ſtrenuous, and unremitting endeavours, towards the eſtabliſhment and maintenance of all the juſt Rights and Privileges of our Country; that we will not ſubmit to any violation of, or encroachment on them, by any uſurped authority whatſoever, and that we are ready, with our Lives and Fortunes, to ſupport every Meaſure that may tend to effectuate this great and neceſſary purpoſe, from which no conſideration ſhall induce us to ſwerve.

Reſolved, That as it is our duty, ſo it is our determination, to give every poſſible encouragement to the Manufactures of Ireland and we do recommend this as a proper object of the conſideration and adoption of every Patriotic Iriſhman in general, and of our brother Volunteers in particular, as the moſt likely means of alleviating the preſent, and of obviating the future diſtreſſes of our Manufactures, and of compenſating, in ſome meaſure, to Ireland for the ſpecious, but hitherto ideal, and deluſive advantages of a Free Trade.

EDWARD CROKER, Major.

The Chairman having quitted the Chair,

Now Invented REFINED SALT.

NOW ſelling by the appointment of the Inventor, at Mr. JOHN MURPHY'S oppoſite the Pump, on the following moderate Terms: The Salt for Curing Meat, Fiſh, Butter, &c. at Two Pence per Pound, one Pound of which will go as far as double the quantity of any other Salt. "The Refined Salt requires no Recommendation but to be known, its Qualities, (far ſuperior to any thing of the kind yet found out,) will be ſufficiently recommendatory itſelf, it is juſt neceſſary to mention, That it is Purified of all Groſs and Corroſive Properties, whereby it is rendered not only remarkably pleaſant, and perfectly Wholeſome, but Beautiful beyond conception, nothing can rival it for whiteneſs of colour. It is of ſuch a nature, that half the quantity preſerves entirely the juices of Fleſh, Fiſh or Butter, ſalted therewith, in the moſt pure ſtate of freſhneſs, and at the ſame time when dreſſed as to admit of ſalt being eaten with it, other Salt corrodes the nutritious and alimentary Qualities of Meat, but the Refined Salt preſerves and keeps it for many Years.
