

viction of the justness of Mr. Flood's due trial of reconciliation; which though it is for the present frustrated in P——t, by the act stale manœuvre of calling for previous questions, Mr. Fitzpatrick has the sagacity to foresee, that the doctrine will soon meet the voice of the kingdom, and is desirous therefore of knowing in time the ultimatum of the English Ministry's determination.

They write from New York, that the 19th regiment and some other troops, were embarked for Jamaica.

On Sunday last, there was a meeting of one of the most respectable corps of Volunteers of this city, to take into consideration the propriety and necessity of addressing their thanks to the Right Hon. Henry Flood, for his manly support of those principles which can alone render Ireland permanently happy and her freedom secure. Almost the whole meeting allowed the justness and nobleness of Mr. Flood's conduct, but it was carried on a division to postpone the address till after the recess.

The death of Lord Tranton, it is apprehended, will make material changes in the law department. It is at all events, a fortunate circumstance that this demise, occurred, when such a political change has taken place, as must bring men of the first rate abilities, and the most incorruptible integrity, into the great offices of the kingdom.

The following is mentioned to be the substance of the will of the late Lord Tranton.
To his widow £5000 per ann. with the house at the Green, and at the Black Rock—these, on her decease, to descend to his younger nephew John Swift, Esq; to whom also he has bequeathed an estate of £2000 per ann.
To his elder nephew, the Revd Mead Swift, an estate of 500 per ann. and to Lady Tranton's sister a legacy of £500.

We hear, that the Right Hon. Hussey Burgh, on being promoted to the chief seat in the Court of Exchequer, will be created Baron Athy; and that Mr. Forbes will succeed in his room to the Prime Serjeancy.

To the P R I N T E R

As your Paper is a very proper chance! to convey useful hints to the public, I shall beg leave to mention a few, which may be a means of preventing the greatest abuses, and saving the lives of many infants.

The Legislature has, very wisely, made a provision in all Cities and Towns corporate, for such Children as may be deserted by their Parents, whether legitimate or illegitimate; and were the terms and intention of the Act properly attended to, it would be productive of the best consequences. But what act can be made, that is not liable to evasion? The present act, as it now stands, provides for Foundlings in the following manner: Three Overseers are appointed annually to take up and maintain, at the expence of the Parish, such Foundlings as shall be left on the Parish; and the Overseers are obliged, under a penalty of ten pounds, to be recovered by civil bill, to take care of such Children. This, no doubt, is a most humane act—an act founded on policy, as well as humanity—an act, which has for its object, the temporal and eternal interests of these poor Orphans—and which it cannot fail being productive of, if properly attended to.

The different Overseers, hitherto in this City, have attended to their duty with the greatest humanity and good nature; but notwithstanding all their care and caution, they have been most grossly imposed upon, and large sums of money have been annually assessed upon the different Parishes to pay the very mother of those children for nursing them.
The conduct of such Women is this:—they (when they leave the Child in the Parish) remain at some convenient distance, or, perhaps, seeming carefully to pass by, when the crying of the infant discovers its being deserted. They say, on this occasion, affect the greatest abarrence to the abandoned Mother; and from their seeming concern for the infant, they (or some other woman, appointed for the purpose) are entrusted by the Overseers with the care of the Child;—This conduct has been often discovered by the Overseers, and no punishment inflicted upon the delinquents.

In order then to get rid of such an imposition, the Overseers have of late sent, or attempted to send, such Foundlings to the Foundling Hospital in Dublin, and proper carriages have been prepared (four on each carriage) with an ordinary woman to feed and take care of them, till they were delivered into the Foundling House: This seemed a very happy expedient: The Legislature has made an ample provision for that foundation, independent of the large annual donations from the charitable and humane; and the children are there, from their tenderness infancy, taken care of till they are able to earn their own bread.

Yet even this expedient has not had the desired effect; for the mothers of those children have, frequently, way-laid the carriages on different parts of the road, and out of a dozen infants, for whom receipts have been given by the carman, not more than half that number reaches the Foundling House; and these children are immediately left again upon the Parish; or perhaps, to avoid discovery, they put them into the adjacent parish, till to be maintained at the expence of the Parish; I shall, therefore, in the meantime, I would, therefore, advise the Governors, and make it only in the House of Industry, by some careful persons to the Foundling House in Dublin, where every attention will be paid them: By keeping them one year in the House of Industry, from their Parents should they make any attempt upon the road to take them away, they will be at a loss to know their own Children, and of course will decline the pursuit.
