

July 19. This day advice was received from the Winchelsea frigate, had been the fleet steering to the N. of Scotland. A letter from Plymouth, July 16. Sailed the Suffolk Myrmidon, Recovery, lent, Apollo, and Cerberus men of war in Lord Howe. Arrived the Mackarel from the coast of Guinea; she was light too off the Lizard by the coming, consisting of 36 sail of the line.

Wednesday Lord Grantham killed by of his hand, on being appointed and Lord te, in the room of Mr. Fox, of Bucking ham, on being created Dux the King's G. His Lordship also Lord Lieutenant id, on being appointed of the Duke of Ireland, in the of Ireland.

The Helena frigate which it arrived from the coast, in 14 days, bring advice of its be blocked up by 7 Spanish ships of the line. Perhaps the expectation of no event what ever has created a universal anxiety as the probability of an engagement between the combined fleets, and that under the command of Lord Howe. Though the enemy have a superiority of force, the personal bravery and tactical skill of the British Admiral, may be deemed sufficient to balance that advantage.

We may expect the fortune of the day to be decided by the happiness of manœuvring; and if our fleet should gain an advantageous position, the courage and conduct of our Admirals, and the enterprising spirit of his Officers and men, together with his ships being all perfectly clean, and prime sailers, are considerations that give no contemptible assurance of success to our arms, even if the battle should take place before Lord Howe receives his decisive reinforcements; and a decisive victory on the part of Great Britain will prove a glorious contrast to the success of the Bahama Islands.

Monday July 22. The reason for delaying it was generous on his part; it was then night, and the attempt was to be made at day break; he knew therefore, that by agreement the English horse must have been at that time lying in the place which he had pointed out as the Monday July 22. The late answer of Congress to Sir Guy Carleton's request for opening a negotiation, fully justifies Lord Shelburne's plan of American accommodation, in preference to Mr. Fox's; the former would give independence to America on her agreeing to conclude a peace; the latter would have proclaimed her independent, and left it to her honor to have concluded such terms as she thought proper.

DUBLIN, July 23. Last night Sir Edw. Newenham's bill, for preventing the lower class of Revenue officers voting at Elections, was thrown out in the House of Lords.
