Friday, Peb. 7. Lord Maitland role to remaid a Right Hon, Secretary of an expression which had fallen from him near two months ago; at that time the Right Hon, Sceretary had affured the House that it was the intention of Ministers to advise his Majesty to bestow fome signal mark of his favor on the gallant General Elliott, for his noble defence of Gibraltar. He was now to afk the Right Hon. Secretary, whether the red ribbon, with a pention of 1300l. a year, was the samual muck of royal favor, that Minifto bestow? if was, he would inform that Right Hen, Gentleman, that he woold, on the first vacant day, move the House for fuch a mark of royal gratitude, as me thought ought to have been conferred on fo gallant a Com-

Mr. Hamet begged leave to inform the House of a very recent and extraordinary event fishere was, he said, at the time he was fpeaking, an American thip in the river Thames, with the thirteen stripes flying on board; this flaip had Officers were all at a joss how to behave; his motive for mentioning this subject was, that Ministers might take such steps; with the Ametican Committioners, as would fecure the tree intercourfe between this country and America. the Minister, peniained filent.

Lord Maitland gave notice, that fince Mimiliters had not thought proper to give any antwer to his question, relative to General Elliot, herwould on the first vacant day, make a motion on the fubject matter of that question.

Mr. D Hartley fand that the call of the House thanding for this day, and the preliminuries of peace not having been yet discutted, he withed that the call might be perfooned; as the ratification had not yet arrived from Paris, he supposed that the confideration of the preliminaries, could not well be taken up before this day, or Monday fe'nnight; and therefore he would move that the call might be adjourned to Wednesday fe'nnight.

Mr. Fox wished the Secretary of State would ha upon fouse particular day, when he thought

Some person in this kingdom, taking advantage of Lord George Gordon's unhappy state of intellects, thought proper to humbug him with the following intelligence. The writer, however, merits the feverest represention, for though Ministers might fmile at Lord George's letter, and treat it with its merired contempt, from a knowledge of the faithood of the infinuations, nevertheless many persons in England might form a prejudice from it against Ireland, not eafily obviated. Such kind of jokes are often attended with ferious confequences; but fince the filter kingdom, are on the point of being united, 'as is devotably to be writted, in everlaking harmony, it is hoped no more intelligence of the following import will be played off
