

Mr. Burke was moved by the House calling loudly for the question, which having been put, the motion was carried without a division, and the House adjourned.

Tuesday March 25.

The House went into a Committee on a Bill for reverting the Act of Attainder, passed in 1746, against Lord Ogleby, for restoring Daniel, commonly called Lord Ogleby, to his estate, and rendering him capable of enjoying any post under the Crown. Lord Newhaven was in the chair, and the Bill passed through the Committee without a debate.

Wednesday, March 26.

Lord Ludlow informed the House from the bar, "That his Lordship had waited upon his Majesty, with the Address of that Honourable House, which his Majesty had been pleased to receive most graciously; and that his Lordship had it in command to signify, that it was his Majesty's desire to do every thing in his power to comply with the wishes of his faithful Commons."

DUBLIN, April 1.

Extract of a letter from London, March 27. "Yesterday an officer was sent express from Gen. Conway, to Jersey, with instructions to the deputy Governor, to quell the mutiny that has broke out among the troops at that place, and which is said to have arisen from their insubordination on being immediately discharged."

It is a certain fact that France has not taken a single step towards disarming. Their politicians are under the greatest anxiety, lest we, in the scuffles of our parties, should have an opportunity of detaching America and Holland from her alliance, and then finding pretences for renewing the war. In which case they have no doubt of offering Gibraltar to the Spaniards to detach them from the alliance of the French.

The next Parliament will have the Happiness of meeting what had never been experienced by their Ancestors, a free Constitution, and a liberated trade. The great Object we have to look up to for our Commerce is America; and this will not appear improbable, when it is considered that three Parts of the American Army were absolutely Irish; that the Congress contains many of the same Nation, and that a Predilection for our Country prevails through all America from the Similarity we lately bore to their Constitution: add to this, our being the nearest of any Part of the old World to the new, and no Doubt remains but we must be the greatest Gainers by their Independence.

Gentlemen, I well know your influence in Parliament; and if at this great and interesting crisis, the promotion of our trade, the encouragement of our manufactures, the employment of our brave disbanded soldiers and sailors, the immediate relief of thousands of our poor natives; if all these be objects worthy the attention of every good man, every citizen, and every Senator, that Influence which you possess; will be exerted to the utmost, and every nerve strained to have this desirable work carried into execution, I can command some Votes in the County of Limerick, but they never shall be given to the man, who will for a moment protract a work so essential to the County, as well as the City of Limerick, and to the whole Kingdom.
