

liberty of conscience ought to be granted to every man. Whether they are papists or protestants I cannot tell, but they are free and open in their manner, and appear to be persons of penetration and judgment. This is the general opinion of them, and to tell you the truth, they are gaining profelytes to their doctrine.

Mr. Daly, it is said, has engaged Mrs. Siddons to act twenty nights in Dublin, at 50l. per night. He has since declared he would not take 1000l. for the profits arising from her acting according to the agreement.

There is evidently a strong jealousy of Great Britain all over the world. The Americans are busily employed in framing treaties of commerce with nations rather inimical to Britain; new accessions are made to the armed neutrality; and it is probable that all the world will conspire to frustrate the effects of the navigation act, whereby this nation attained the proud and envied title of mistress of the sea. To say the truth, as a citizen of the world, the deep ought not to have any mistress; or, to change the allegory, the deep should not be a monopoly, or reserved spouse, but a common mistress to all maritime nations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.
Saturday, November 15.
The House according to order, resolved into a Committee of ways and means, in which the Attorney General continued his observations, for the continuance of several duties from the 25th of December next, to the 5th of March, 1785, without any material alteration, which being agreed to, the House resumed.

Mr. Foster reported, that the Committee had made some progress, and desired leave to sit again.—Ordered to sit on Monday.

Mr. Corry made several severe observations on the conduct of some Gentlemen who on the preceding night had, by mistaking on the order the day in a most indecent, not to say unparliamentary manner, prevented him from making his intended motion for an address to Majesty, by obstructing the order of the day; mode of proceeding which, if drawn into precedent, might always be practised when any motion was intended that was not agreeable to Gentlemen on the other side of the House; which reason he found himself under the necessity of protesting against it, as a breach of privilege of speech which the Speaker degraded from the Throne at the beginning of session. He then gave notice, that he would on Wednesday next, move an address to Majesty on the Prince of Wales having attended his one and twentieth year.

John Parnell presented a petition from several persons, publishing, concerned in the making of woollen yarn in the Queen's county, setting forth that there has been a great decrease in the exportation of woollen yarn from that county; praying an encouragement on that point.—Ordered to lie on the table.

General Cunningham adverted to the business of last night, respecting the tax on private houses who should brew beer or ale, and related to wanton and unproductive a tax.

The Attorney General said, the principal objection that was adduced, of the excise on the entry into private houses, would be removed by a composition, or collected by the money collectors, as the duty on carrying.

"I have, however," continued he, "yesterday thought of an alteration in the mode of ascertaining this duty, that I hope will be of service in raising private brewing was either disliked or not disapproved, said he would for the present withdraw it, hoping that by the next session a more equal duty, by means of a malt tax, would be laid.

Mr. Molynux deferred his promised motion for an Abolition Tax, until Monday next.

The Attorney General moved that an additional duty of 2l. per cwt. be laid on all Iron and Steel, and Steel-wire imported into this kingdom. Passed nem. con.

Last week a dispute happened between Mr. John Acheson, of Annalong, near Newry, and one Williams, a revenue Officer, which rose to such a height, that Mr. Acheson struck the latter with a stick, who, retreating a few paces, hit him with a rope so violently on the head, that he knocked him down, and fractured his skull, in consequence of which he expired two days after. Williams has since been taken and lodged in Downpatrick Gaol. The untimely death of Mr. Acheson is much lamented, as he was a man universally esteemed.
