

Right Hon George Ogle, Counsellors Caldbeck, Downes, and Whitestone, attended with white slaves, as regulators of the business of We learn with very great pleasure, that no less than twenty-seven counties, besides the several great cities and towns of Ireland, were fully represented in the National Assembly of Delegates, who met yesterday, pursuant to adjournment, to deliberate on the important subject of a more equal representation of the people, among whom are men of the greatest worth, fortune, and abilities in the nation. The numbers attending were upwards of two hundred.

The same wisdom is still observed in not admitting any auditors, in order to interrupt or procrastinate debates, but when the important subject of Reform has been fully arranged, the same will, no doubt, be given at large to the public, and be such as will reflect honor on both the Delegates and the people, by whom they have been deputed.
