"This day, the Irish Propositions were fully debated on in the House of Lords. Lord Grey moved that the report be brought up, which brought on a debate, that is likely to still two or three o'clock in the morning. Several Lords had before ten o'clock (it is now ten) spoken for and against the motion; and it is remarkable, Lord Sackville has taken against the Ministry. He made a speech favourable to the Propositions, and moved, the report be deferred for four months to Carlisle, Scarisdale, Fitzwilliam, Thurston and Stormont, had also given their sentiments on the subject."

Matters I must declare to you are going much against us. He has already Irish business been deserted by his polities, the Marquises Buckingham and down, and Lord Sackville. Lord Rawdon and other respectable Peers heretofore of us, have declared against him on the ground by which his abilities as a Minister are tried. Notwithstanding all which, the Propositions will certainly pass the British Parliament."

universal with of every Lord in England, whether in or out of office is an UNION. I confess this is no time to bring about measure—but what do they do? They the expedient of external legislation, they can tear up your Parliament root and branch, they unanimously attempt to rid it of dependence.

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES.

Thursday, July 21.

Mr. Fox presented a petition from the Waterford, praying to postpone the measure for a commercial arrangement, after a short conversation between him and Mr. Pitt was ordered to lie on the table. Mr. Fox then committed for encouraging manufactures in the province of Munster. After a short conversation was negatived by a Majority of 48 to 14.

Mr. Fox now declared it to be the wish of the House that when the little remaining business was finished, no further adjournment should be thought of, but that General Pitt, by a prorogation, be permitted to govern the country, to enjoy the blessings of the system of commerce had introduced into this House, it had questionable parts are increased ten fold, so that we must be idiots or slaves if we adopt them, for they contain an abandonment of our independent legislature, and of the range of Free Trade which began to open upon us.—He had entertained—he yet entertained an high opinion of the hereditary virtues of the Minister of England, and thought it an advantage to have a man at the head of affairs, who had a character to lose, and he believed he did not act from himself in the present mischievous business. The sense of all Ireland is known as to the subject of commercial arrangement. It is every where reprobated, and whether it comes forward again in the shape of Regulations, or under the specious mark of a Bill, this nation is of one mind, and desired only to remain as it is, and not to overwhelm us with favours which we do not desire. He therefore requested to ask the Right Honourable Minister whether the measure is intended to be brought forward in this session or not.

Mr. Orde thought it would be wrong to adjourn until the sense of Parliament should be taken upon the propositions. He had great respect for the Right Hon. Gentleman, but he could not but recollect that upon a former occasion that he had retracted mistakes made with regard to this very system.

Mr. Brownlow denied his having ever retracted his former assertion, that the 11th Proposition was a tribute from this country to Great Britain for ideal advantages. He had been misrepresented in one of the newspapers as having done so, which he supposed to arise from his having through civility retracted, or rather softened, some harsh expressions he had used to the Right Honourable Gentleman.

Mr. Orde declared that he adverted to mistakes and not civilities of the Right Honourable Gentleman. He had asserted that the nation would feel dissatisfied so soon as they became acquainted with the Propositions; on the contrary, the more they know of them, the better satisfied they were.

Mr. Corry was not surprised at the silence kept by Administration, for it was no more than he expected; but he confessed that he was astonished at the conduct of the Right Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Orde) in his attack on his Right Hon. Friend, whose conduct was always distinguished for his moderation, as it was for being in unison with the feelings of his country; but perhaps he ought not to be surprised at it when he considered the apathy of the nation in suffering themselves to be trod upon by a stranger, an alien. He reprobated the arrangement as tending to a dissolution.

Mr. Burgh, of Oldtown, called upon the House in order to get rid of what they had repeatedly declared a calumny; that assertion so often made, that every thing was done by the exertions of the people without doors, and by having virtue enough to demand a prorogation, prevent the necessity of their interference.

Mr. Moore declared that the House ought not to suspect dangers before they saw them; when they did it would be time enough to attack them; a confidence ought to be reposed in the administration of the country, and in that confidence he should hope nothing ill could or would be attempted.

Sir H. Cavendish asked the lost Honourable Member, was there no danger in the Ninth English Proposition? He for his part knew there was much; but he also knew one thing more, and he was going to say a bold word; he knew that Administration would not dare to bring it into that House; and he therefore willingly should abide whatever was to be brought forward.

The Attorney General said; that the Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Corry) had nothing to answer for the apathy of the country; he had done every thing to disturb its tranquility. He confessed himself apprehensive of speaking, while things were in their present situation, such misrepresentations appeared. He declared, however, that for one, he never should consent to impose unfair terms upon his country; and whensoever the nation was called on to register the edicts of another country, it would be then time enough to speak out.

Mr. Dunn declared, that it was not only the Fourth Proposition which exterminated the Legislature of this country, but there were ten others which were founded on the same principle, in which they had geographically, described a map of exclusion to our commerce, as well as destruction to our Legislature. He concurred in the desire of a prorogation.

Mr. Stewart spoke strongly against the Fourth Proposition.

Mr. John Wolfe believed the whole of the present system to have originated from that malignant spirit which for the last five and twenty years had governed the Cabinet, and by its measures had brought about the American war.—That, that same malignant spirit wished to dismember the Empire, and deprive the world of the only remains of liberty. He wished the Right Hon. Gentleman to declare, whether the Fourth Proposition was to be brought forward.

Sir Henry Cavendish ended the debate, by saying, that he understood nothing injurious to the commercial or constitutional rights of the nation, would be introduced under the present Administration. Adjourned.

Friday, July 22.

The House pursuant to order, resolved

Rt. Hon. Owen Wynne presented a petition from the merchants and inhabitants of Sligo, against the commercial adjustment now pending in England between this kingdom and Great Britain; as did Mr. O'Hara, a similar petition from the county of Sligo. Both ordered to lie on the table.

The Earl of Glandore's bill (from the Lord) read a third time, and passed.—Adjourned.

LIMERICK.

The Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Limerick, has appointed Tuesday the Second of August next, to hold his Visitation for said Diocese.

Among the many bad consequences that may arise to the Public, by the frequent liberations of Montgolifiers or Fire Balloons, one has already taken place, viz. that the Insurance Companies against Fire, who lately covered the risk of Thatched Houses at 5s. per Cent. will not do the same now under 12s. 6d.

It must give every honest man pleasure, to find that an act of Parliament got the Royal Assent last Tuesday, which will in a great measure put an end to law suits; as every person who sues for an Injunction, must pay treble costs, if it does not appear in the issue, that he has justice at his side, and a Verdict goes against him.

It is generally imagined that the high price of Hay, proceeds chiefly from the Arts used by monopolizers, as the stock of Old Hay on hands, the late seasonable rains, and the crop of aftergrass expected by the farmers, must bring that article down, to its usual price of thirty shillings per Ton.

Saturday morning about nine o'clock, a fire broke out in a Work-house of Mr. Peacock, Chandler, in the back-lane, Irish-town, which entirely consumed the same, with three dwelling houses adjoining; Mr. Peacock's loss amounts to 300l. and several poor families are reduced to great distress, none of them being insured; the activity of the Magistrates, with the timely assistance of the Fire Engines and the Army, got the fire under in five hours, or a great part of the city must have been laid in ashes.

John White returns his sincere Thanks to the Mayor, Recorder, Sheriffs, Alderman Widdemans, Major Lovell, Lieutenants Peddie, and Craig, of the 21st Regiment, and to the other Gentlemen, for their very humane and active exertions in putting out the Fire in his Concerns, and preventing its spreading farther.

Married. Last Thursday the Rev. Thomas Shepherd, to Miss Morony, daughter to the late Andrew Morony of Dunaha, in the Co. Clare, Esq; a very amiable young Lady, with a considerable fortune.

Died. Last Friday, at the Parade, aged 80, Mrs. Halpenny, mother of Pat. Halpenny, Esq; Secretary to the Lord Chancellor.

Committed. Last Thursday night, to the City Gaol, by the Worshipful Mayor, Hugh McDaniell, alias Hughy Wag, charged with robbing a Young Woman of her Cloak, in Creagh-lane, same night.

Port-News. July 23. Sailed the Anthony, Hiffernan, with a Cargo of Beef and Butter for Bordeaux; in which vessel Major Powell, and Family went passengers.

THE COUNTY LIMERICK TRUE-BLUE UNION, are to meet at Kilmallock, on Monday next, the First of August, at 12 o'clock. As there are some Members to be ballotted for, and other business to be transacted, it is hoped that every Member who possibly can, will attend. Dinner to be on the Table precisely at Four.
