from England and this country, yet the consequences to England will be such, that in all The letter from Dunkirk inferted in this paper from the last English mail, which mentions the failors of a French fhip having feen in the North Seas what appeared to them a floating ifland, was very probably the kraken. or korren, mentioned by Pontoppidan, the existence of which, though of so extraordipary a nature, is now established beyond a doubt. Its bulk is faid to be a mile and a half in circumference; and when part of it appears above the water, it refembles a number of finall illands and fand banks, on which files disport themselves, and sea weeds grow: upon a farther emergement, a number of pellucid antennæ, each about the height, form, and fize of a moderate maft, appear; and by their action and re-action gather their food, confilling of small fishes. When he finks, which he does gradually, a dangerous fwell of the fea fuceeeds, and a kind of whirlpool is naturally formed in the water. In 1681, a young kraken perished among the rocks and cliffs of the parith of Alftahong; and his death was attended with fuch a stench, that the channel where it died was impassable. We may fafely fay, that the existence of this fish being proved, accounts for many of those phenomena of floating iflands, and transitory appearances in the fea, that have hitherto been held as fabulous by the learned, who could have no idea of fuch an anunal.

Thursday morning a duel was fought at the Fifteen Acres, between an Officer of one of the seguments in garrison, and a Surgeon of this city, when the other was that through the body, and the furgeon through the leg. The cause of quarrel is reported to be owing to the former violently jostling the latter off the flagway in Parliament-fireet, the evening before, and refuling to make any apology for fo doing. -It is thought the officer's wound will not prove mortal; and the furgeon's being in the fleily part of the leg, will not be attended, in all probability, with any dangerous confe-

To the PRINTER of the LIMERICK CHRONICLE, SIR,

Surpriz'd at the uninterrupted Silence of our County, when so many others have nobly delivered their Sentiments and Inftractions to their Representatives, relative to the twenty propolitions which have recently palled both Houses of Parliament in England, I cannot longer refrain from tre patting on your ufeful Paper, in hopes of warning my Countrymen how meanly, to opulent and Independent a County as ours must Appear, when feemingly tacitly to Confent to a Scheme fraught with Oppression, Stavery and Ruin. A requisition to our worthy High Sheriff to take the Sense of his Bailiwic, would I dare lay, meet with Success; our Affizes are near at hand, let our Union be among ourfelves; and let our Duties reciprocally be to do Justice to our Native Country. Honelty has marked the Conduct of our Representatives, our Exertions must give additional weight to theirs, let us then Unite, and Speedily too, for no time is to be loft, and throw in our Mite to fave the Liberties of Ireland.
