

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, September 5.

A number of the Members having assembled, pursuant to the last adjournment, the Clerk at the table rose, and informed them, that he had received a letter from the Right Hon. Edmond Sexton Pery, the Speaker of that House, which he desired to have the honour of reading to the Members. He then proceeded to read the letter, which was as follows:

"GENTLEMEN,

"My advanced age, the decline of my strength, and, what I feared most, of my understanding, have determined me, before my imperfections become more apparent, to retire from that high station to which your favour had raised me. To these personal considerations let me add one of much more moment, the hazard of an interruption to the business of the public by my infirmities. These motives have induced me to request, that you will accept of my resignation of that high office with which you honoured me, and elect another Gentleman in my room; and give me leave Gentlemen, at the same time, to make my most humble and grateful acknowledgments to you for your tenderness and indulgence to my errors, and for the constant and honourable support which you have given me in the discharge of my duty during the course of fourteen years and upwards, the memory of which can never be erased from my mind. I am, with the utmost respect, and the most sincere affection,

Gentlemen,

Your most obliged,

And most obedient servant,

EDM. SEX. PERY."

4th Sept. 1785. The Rt. Hon. Mr. Orde said, he with much reluctance was obliged to inform the House, that his Grace the Lord Lieutenant had also received a letter to the same effect. He expressed the deepest concern that the nation should be deprived of the advantages which the House had long received from the wisdom and integrity of Mr. Pery — He would not he said, attempt to enter into an eulogium on the merits of a man; whom though he had less opportunities of judging than almost any other Member of the House, he had been used to think of with the highest veneration, and whose conduct in the chair, for more than fourteen years, had established his reputation beyond the necessity of praise — but would endeavour to provide a successor, worthy of such a man; and in answering his Rt. Hon. Friend, Mr. Foster, he had an honest pride in reflecting how highly a Gentleman's character stood in the estimation of the House, how many and how great talents he had given of his exalted talents, extensive knowledge of business, and unshaken integrity — qualities for which he trusted he should enjoy the fruits long after he (Mr. Orde) should cease to be a witness of them. — He must now be deprived of the benefit of his services, but when he considered how much they were to be desired.

"That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, most humbly to beseech his Majesty that he will be graciously pleased to confer some signal mark of his royal favour upon the Right Hon. Edm. Sex. Pery; late Speaker of this House, for his great and eminent services performed to this country, and the distinguished ability and integrity with which he has presided in the Chair of this House, and to assure his Majesty, that whatever expence upon that account, this House will make good the same to his Majesty.

Which likewise passed in the affirmative nem. con.

Lord Headfort moved that a committee be appointed to draw up "an address to his grace the Lord Lieutenant, for his wise and prudent Administration." He said, when he considered the wisdom which had so conspicuously distinguished the present Administration, he could not withstand his desire of giving his approbation to their merits, and the exertions which they had made in favour of Ireland.

Mr. Howard seconded the motion, and passed some very flattering encomiums on his grace of Rutland; after which the motion passed nem. con.

Sir Lucius O'Brien was beginning to speak upon the subject of the Grand Canal, when several members being desirous that the House should adjourn, some disorder arose. The Speaker rising, said, he could not better shew his respect to the members, and his regard to the dignity of the House, than by preserving its order, which he was therefore determined to do, and begged gentlemen would not be offended if, as often as they should forget order, he should feel himself obliged to call upon them as he now did, to take their places, and bear their worthy member. — The members instantly repaired to their places, and Sir Lucius O'Brien declared his satisfaction at this early exertion of the Speaker to preserve order, and assured him, that while he endeavoured to promote regularity in debate he might ever rely on his support, and that of the House; however as gentlemen did not seem inclined to enter on the subject he had proposed to them, he would not for the present trespass on their time.

Adjourned to to-morrow.
