

son, whether steps had been taken by the administration in England, to procure for this or a removal of the obstructions to our trade with Portugal.

Secretary Orde answered the hon. genl. by saying, that since the additional duties laid on by the Irish parliament on goods of Portugal, some steps had been taken by the administration in England, to induce the gov. of Portugal to relax in her disposition towards this country; it was at present under consideration, but he hoped the event would be favourable to this kingdom.

Corry said the inattention of Parliament in last sessions, and also in the present, to the subject was highly blameable; he insisted the interest of this country was neglected by the British minister; last sessions of Parliament he had moved for copies of the treaties existing between Great Britain and foreign powers, they were refused him; we are driven to war with Portugal without England intending in our cause. Here he took notice the business was hurrying so fast through the House, that the sessions will end in a very short time, and if something is not done, in respect to duties, in the course of this session, this country may be materially injured before the next session.

Lucius O'Brien was also of opinion, that the country had been neglected by the administration in England in the Portugal business; he moved the House should come to some resolution on that head.

Corry then moved, that a committee be appointed to enquire into the collection of stamp duty on advertisements.

Mr. Naas objected, and said there was no probability for appointing a committee for that purpose, as he was then ready to give the hon. gentleman such information as he wanted; he moved that appointing such a committee was unnecessary.

Mr. Corry replied, that if information was desired that House, there was an end to the matter.

Mr. Naas, in order to get rid of the business, moved the question of adjournment, to to-morrow, which was carried.

Monday, Feb. 13. At the request of Mr. Corry, the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the duty on newspapers, advertisements, &c.

Mr. Corry observed, it was rather an imposition to him to state the difficulties and objections of the tax on the printers and the booksellers, as the information had been denied. He stated from the petition, which he had presented, the grievances of the printers, that they were considerable losers by the sale of their papers, from the expence of printing, paper, &c.

The Attorney General spoke in favour of the continuance, as no hardship on the poor or the printer.

Mr. Forbes, Mr. Brownlow, Mr. Burgh of Galloway, Mr. Todd Jones, and Mr. Kearney in support of Mr. Corry's motion, who moved to discontinue the stamp duty after the first ten days, so that every advertisement might pay its full price. The question being put for continuing the duty as at present.

Ayes 118—Noes 51—Majority 67. The Chancellor of the Exchequer presented his resolution for taxing Insurances from Fire, with reasons in support of it. [Here it is necessary to observe, that besides the 3 Irish Insurance Companies, the merchants, &c. of Dublin, Limerick, Cork, and other places, had petitioned against the tax, but which were declined to be either presented or received, as militating against the usage of Parliament.]

Mr. Hartley, Sir F. Hutchinson, and Mr. Corry objected to the tax.

The Chan. of the Exchequer observed, that the gentlemen had no new taxes to cavil at, they abused themselves in opposing old ones.—The motion was then negatived, by the resolution as it originally stood being agreed to without a division.—The other resolutions were then agreed to, and the report ordered to be received to-morrow.—Adjourned.

Belfast, Feb. 9. We hear that a dreadful battle was fought on the banks of the Lagan river, near Spencer's-bridge, in which many hundreds of combatants were engaged, and several so dreadfully wounded and bruised that they were obliged to be carried off the ground on doors and planks. This unhappy affair originated from an old dispute between the people of the manor of Kilwarlin and those of Trillick, and Broombridge, and in consequence of which a dreadful battle was fought on the Blazie Course about seven or eight years ago, in which many lives were lost.

Cork, Feb. 13. At 6 o'clock on Saturday evening, three men, Callinan, Hegarty and Egan came to the house of Mr. John Exam, at Valebrook, in the North suburbs of this city, who they met walking with Mrs. Exam in the avenue, &c. demanded drink, he disliked their assurance and bid them begone, which they refused, and said he must suffer them into the house, on which he presented a gun, desiring them to keep off, then one of them seized Mrs. Exam and held her before the door, and beat him into the house with stones, and then retired; but at the hour of 11 that night they returned, and broke into an out-house, from whence they took a spade and a long pole, with which they demolished most of the furniture, and on Cath-

On the night of the 3d inst. that active and vigilant Peace Officer, Mr Rowland Sharp, apprehended on suspicion of being a robber, a Timothy Ryan, otherwise M'Carthy, who appears to have been the person who robbed the shop of Mr. Perkins Barber, on the Grand Parade. He also had been an accomplice with John Linnahan, and Peter Lopell, now confined in Limerick goal, in a felony committed in the county of Tipperary.
