

Lord, my poor fellow-country-men, who are persecuted by a monster, an abominable monster, whom we have nourished in our bosom; who, not satisfied with having plundered our goods, with his black-friends, is moreover thirsty after blood, the blood of the unhappy patriots. Grant, Lord, that he may perish, and that when he is in the convulsions of death, none may be touched with compassion! (affecte) Praise be unto thee, O Lord, that thou hast opened the eyes of those, who hitherto would not believe that this monster was capable of such horrible deeds. Save our Sovereigns, and grant that those who may lose their lives for their zeal for the country, may exchange their abode with that which Barnveld and De Witt enjoy," &c.

Extract of a letter from Geneva, Oct. 10.
"Mr. Bukell is now here to negotiate a treaty with the Protestant cantons, on account of the States General of Holland, for the hire of troops in case of necessity. The term is to be for 14 years from the time of signing, but neither the number of men, nor the conditions, have yet transpired."

Monday morning, at half past six o'clock, a fire broke out at Mr. Southern's, bookfeller, in St. James's-street, which in less than half an hour was burnt to the ground, together with the adjoining house (a seed shop) and some other houses adjoining were much damaged.—The accident happened as follows: Mr. Southern having taken all the pamphlets, &c. out of the window on Saturday night, got up a little after six on Monday morning to clean the windows, but being a dark foggy morning he could not see without the help of a candle, and having occasion to go into the yard, where he was for about five minutes, on his return the shop was in flames occasioned by a spark of the candle, or by the candle falling down. It was with great difficulty that his wife and child escaped out of their beds, and there was not time to get a single article out of the house. Fortunately for the neighbourhood, there was a great many engines, and plenty of water by seven o'clock.

DUBLIN October, 31.

Another, and more particular transcript of the treaty of commerce with France, has appeared in the London newspapers that have arrived here since our last, (for which see first page) but we are sorry to say, that the provisions therein have not in the least a more favourable aspect for the people of Ireland than what we had before. Our linens, the only article worth mentioning in the treaty whose exportation could be of any advantage, will, we find, remain in a manner prohibited in France, by being subject to the same duty there that Dutch and Flemish linens pay here, which is about 8d. per yard; which duty, is the utmost that French Cambrics are in future to pay on importation into Ireland. This is an equalization with a vengeance!

There is no part of the new treaty between England and France so very alarming as that which relates to the diminution of the duties on former. Many bye-bets were made before and at starting, and considerable odds offered in favour of Munster Lads.

Died. On Saturday 21st inst. at his seat at Rhasane, in the county of Galway, of a paralytic stroke, Robert French, Esq.
