The Mayor, having with his usual attention to the Publick welfare, sent a description of John O'Neil to the Police Office in Dublin, had an immediate answer, that said O'Neil was an old offender, and had been often tried; but as no indictment now lies against him, he will of course be discharged; therefore we repeat our caution to the Publick to be constantly on their guard against the sharpers and robbers who quitted Dublin, and are now dispersed in the country.

It now appears that O'Neil's real name is Francis Logan; he was discharged last Friday, and next day a poor man and woman from Clonmel, who had heard him described in this Paper, and whom he had robbed of a parcel of Cunnemarra stockings,—arrived here and lodged informations against him.

We hear the Citizens of Limerick are determined to have a Portrait drawn of their late Chief Magistrate, Sir Christopher Knight, to be placed in the Grand Jury Room of the City Court-House, in gratitude for the many advantages they derived from his Mayoralty.
