HOUSE of COMMONS.

THURSDAY, Jan. 17.

Delvin rose to move the Address to his
y. He said no language could be too to express the happiness we feel in being ed by a Prince whose constant unremitdy in the paternal care of all his Sub-nd he hoped long, long might he live hearts of the People of this kingdom; dship in a pathetic strain deplored the f the Duke of Rutland, our late chief or, to whose virtue he paid every triaplaufe.

Packenham seconded the Address.
Parsons condemned that part of the which complimented the public con-the late Duke of Rutland, it was de-that this House approved of the mea-of that Nobleman's Administration, and in a manner pledging the House to a ance of such measures; he took notice bill for regulating the press, which had 1782, and which he said was an in-the constitution; and he wished to was it the intention of the present Adtion to put the constitution on the same t was;—he would be glad to know e intention of this Administration to the system of Attachments—to the our anti-constitutional Police—or to m of the odious Riot Act!—These ems that tended to encrease the pre-of the crown, and to diminish the lithe people. Were the same measures ered to or not?

Attorney General said a few words, ressive of his disapprobation of the de by Mr. Parsons.

Browne, begged the Hon. gentle-consider that acts of Parliament are the chief governor; and he believed gentleman would stand single in the o the address.

sons withdrew his amendment, and on the Address was then put and
