The serious part of our readers, and parents in particular, will be pleased, to find that we always insert the yearly Epistles of the Quakers. Who can read them without perceiving that they contain excellent precepts of what every Christian ought to profess, and that spirit of religious contentment and meekness, which distinguish that sect, and which if they were more universally practised, would encrease universal benevolence, and moral honesty.

Last Saturday, pursuant to his sentence at the last Assizes of Galway, — Haly was hanged, quartered and beheaded near Woodford, for the murder of Mr. Holton, late Surveyor of Excise of Loughrea; and Mr. Michael Page for aiding and encouraging said murder, put off his trial until the next Assizes.

Yesterday, — Molony, turf-porter, was whipped through the City pursuant to sentence at the last Quarter Sessions, for an assault and riot.

Yesterday evening the servant maid of David Hynes on Pennywell road, robbed his house in his absence, of a sum of money, a parcel of wearing apparel, and other articles, with which she made her escape.

Last night at twelve o'clock, the Rev. Mr. Ingram was attacked near the Pump, by two footpads, one of whom had a drawn sword; they demanded his money, but Mr. Ingram made a stout resistance, and they ran down Pump-lane.
