The Archbishop of Sens, the lately discarded French minister, is the grandson of one of our countrymen, who quitted Ireland immediately after the capitulation of Limerick, and distinguished himself afterwards in the post of lieutenant colonel in Flanders—His name was O'Brien, but the family have since Frenchified it, by changing it to BREZINE.—It is remarkable that above one third of the dignified Ecclesiastics in France are of Irish descent, and were originally of ennobled families in Ireland, who had either been attainted for following the fortunes of the Stewart family, or obliged to fly the country in Queen Elizabeth's time, or after the disturbances of the year 1641.
