

LIMERICK.

TO THE PRINTER OF THE LIMERICK CHRONICLE.

giving the following Lines a Place in your very useful Paper, you will much oblige a constant Reader, INCOGNITUS.

Quæ mare compeſcant cauſæ.—Hox.

CERTAIN Philoſopher of great repute, obſerves, that idleneſs and affluence firſt riſe to moſt of the fine arts and ſciences, the mind ſatiated with every ſenſual enjoy- ment and tranſitory gratification, thro' neceſſity ſeeks for more laſting and permanent delights, which are only to be found in investigating the ſe- crets of Nature, and admiring the wonder- ful variety through all its works. Indulging a Paſſion of this kind, and charmed with the ſucceſs of the opinion—I happened to eſpy from my window a young gentleman lately arrived, on whom Nature beſtowed a fine per- ſonage, good health, and perhaps good intellects; approaching him a preternatural appear- ance of a certain part of his body, excited my curioſity, and with all the ſolicitude of an old Phyſician, I aſked him had he been lately ill, to which he replied in the negative; however, ſuſpecting ſome diſorder, the nature and extent of which he was totally unacquainted with, I threatened imminent danger to his con- ſtitution, if he prevailed with him to ſub- mit to a medical inſpection, and for this purpoſe I called in ſome of the faculty, the moſt eminent in the city; with all the gravity and professional ſeriousneſs imaginable, they ſurveyed my patient from head to foot, ſtark naked, and pronounced him free from all complaints, either chronic or acute; yet when he dreſſed himſelf the ſame day, he had an appearance which alarmed my feelings, and he ſhewed it to their view. This not a little ſurprized the Galenians, who are long in the habit of ſuſpecting all diſorders, they began to twirl their heads, take ſnuff, talk of cauſes and eſſences, gluten, viſcidities, lymph, &c. &c. &c. I maintained it was not a Hernia congenita, nor a moral Hernia; another, with equal heat and dogmatical authority, aſſerted it could not be an umbilical or ventral Hernia; while the third exclaimed with an oath, that it was not a Hernia of the foramen ovale, or the Hernia inguinalis, and nevertheleſs they all agreed it was a Hernia. In this dilemma and diverſity of opinions, I ſeized the opportunity of ſhewing my ſuperior land medical knowledge, and removed all doubts by ſhewing them that this appearance ſiſted in the make of the breeches and not in the ſuit of the tailor, therefore called it a Hernia Sartoris, or the Tailor's Hernia. To this they all agreed for the firſt time, and I ſhewed my new ſpecies of Hernia, and modeſtly propoſed, which is, to transport to Botany Bay, ſome one or who in future would make for any whatſoever, a breeches in this new ſpecies, in open violation of all decorum, ſenſe, and female delicacy, to the con- fuſion and diſappointment of the ſex.

Friday the 24th regiment embarked at Malinbeg, co. Cork, to go on board his Ma- jeſty's Ship Endymion of 44 guns for Quebec.

Doctor Neil, a phſician at St. Florentino, having been called in as an ocular witneſs to this extraordinary cure, and publiſhed it for the information and ſervice of his fellow crea- tures.

That truly great and virtuous character Berkeley, Biſhop of Cloyne, in his unwearied exertions to ſerve mankind, examined, with the moſt ſcrutinizing and learned reſearch, into the qualities of tar-water, and found it, the moſt univerſal and invaluable medicine ever yet diſcovered at this ſeaſon of the year; he particularly recommends it to be drank by all perſons, as it abſolutely prevents a fever or con- tagious diſtemper to be taken, though the at- moſphere ſhould be in the moſt putrid ſtate; nor can ſmall-pox, meaſles, or any other in- fectionous contagion be caught, while it is taken either morning or evening. This Catholicon poſſeſſes more virtues than are attributed to Jeſuits Bark, Calomel, with the whole liſts of names to be found in a Druggiſt's or Apothe- cary's ſhop, and therefore ſhould be generally drank, by people even in the beſt ſtate of health, in order to enſure a long continuance of the ſame.

On Friday laſt arrived in this city from the Eaſt Indies, (but laſt from a tour on the Euro- pean Continet) Capt. Henry Martin D'Esteſte, eldeſt ſon of Norcott D'Esteſte, Eſq; after an abſence of eleven years from his native country.

Monday evening, Mr. O'Brien, High Con- ſtable, apprehended Patrick Cuſhin, who on Monday ſe'night ſtole out of Mr. Kendal's ſhop in Broad-ſtreet, a piece of black Sattinet, two yards of which was found in his pocket when taken;—he was committed to the City Gaol by Alderman Widenham.
