It is a circumstance truly curious, and which is well worthy the confideration of the British Government, that during the whole of the diflurbances in France-of their necessities-of their actual want-when there was a ceffation in every fort of trade, and Government in all its functions was torpid - the mighty work at Cherbourg went on without the interruption of a fingle day. The army was neglected, and broken in pieces. The navy was neglected .--The workmen fruck in the dock-yards both their vival alacrity, and the workmen duly paid in ready money. This proves that this work is estimated fo highly by the French nation, that neither tumu't nor poverty can draw them from the enterprife, or even make them relax in it. In this very moment, when, unless by fome miracle they procure ninety millions more than the produce of the month, a temporary floppage must take place in their payments, they go on at Cherbourg, and there is no apparent want of specie. Surely some funds must have been appropriated to this public work, and made inalienable, or it is confidered as equally important with the exillence of the people. Comte D'Artois's debts amount to eight millions of livres: the illustrious Heir Apparent of
