

...actual interruption of the blessing of peace.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,
I have ordered the proper officers to lay the national accounts before you, fully relying upon your accustomed zeal to provide for the exigencies of the state and honorable support of his Majesty's government.

I have also ordered an account of the extraordinary expences of government which have been incurred during the negotiation with Spain to be laid before you; and I trust you will find that the confidence you reposed in me has not been misplaced.

My Lords and Gentlemen,
Your disposition to facilitate the business of commerce and to consult the ease of the merchants will induce you to consider, and if possible to accomplish during this session, such regulations as may tend to simplify the collection of the various articles of the public revenue.

Your unremitting care of the agriculture, trade, and manufactures of this kingdom, and particularly the linen manufacture, and your accustomed liberality to the Protestant Charter School and other public institutions for charitable purposes, make it unnecessary for me to direct your attention to those objects individually.

A more intimate acquaintance with this country has increased my wishes for its welfare; and I have observed with the sincerest satisfaction the extension of her agriculture, her rising trade, and improving manufactures. You may be assured of my co-operation in every measure that may conduce to those important purposes; and while I thus fulfil his Majesty's commands, I shall attain the highest object of my ambition if I can be instrumental in contributing to the prosperity and happiness of Ireland.

His Excellency having retired, the Lord Chancellor read the Speech, and it was afterwards read at the table by the Clerk.

The Marquis of WATERFORD moved, that an humble address be presented to his Majesty, expressive of the thanks of this House for his communication of the convention with Spain; as also a condolence on the death of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland.—the rest of the motion, as usual, echoed the Speech.

The Earl of Bective moved, that an humble address be presented to his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant to thank him for his speech from the throne.

The motion was agreed to nem. diss. and a committee appointed to prepare the same.

The LORD CHANCELLOR presented, he said, by order of the Lord Lieutenant, translated copies of the Declaration and Counter-Declaration, and the Convention entered into with Spain.

The titles being read, they were ordered to lie on the table.

After which the house adjourned to next day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, Jan. 20

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant's speech, (the Lords) was read from the chair, and being afterwards read at the table by the clerk.

Mr. J. WOLFE, moved the Address, which, as usual, is the echo of the speech.

Mr. VANDERBURG, in very few words, seconded the motion for the Address.

After the Address had been read from the chair,

Mr. GRATTAN rose to give only his dissent to the address expressive of their approbation quences occasioned by this many bad consequences solicitous for its abolition, with and ear- your Excellency to take it into your more consideration, humbly confiding in your Excellency's powerful interference to recommend to the Legislature and promote such measures as may be effectual to suppress a practice which militates so alarmingly against every principle of religion and morality, and is highly injurious to the industry, the property and the lives of all his Majesty's faithful subjects in this kingdom.

To which his Excellency returned the following Answer:

I entirely concur with you in opinion that the most mischievous consequences arise to the health and morals of the people from the immoderate use of spirituous liquors, and I shall be happy to co-operate in such measures as shall be found expedient to remedy this evil.

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant has been pleased to appoint Arthur O'Connor, of Mount Arthur, Esq. to be High Sheriff of the county of Cork, for the present year.—And,

William Spaight, Esq. of Corbally, to be High Sheriff of the co. Clare.

A very important discovery has, we hear, been lately made at Belfast by two ingenious mechanics of that town. It is a form of such a construction that one man may, in the same time discharge double the same quantity of work that is at present performed by two in the common loom.
