But, happily, the generality of the censure of the Most Rev. Prelate deprived it of its effect. The poison contains its own antidote, and I will not insult your understanding by vindicating the Irish Catholic against an imputation which would stigmatize, alike, every member of his church, and embrace in its wide grasp of undistinguishing proscription the greater portion of the Christian World.

The measure brought forward by this bill contains a great principle of national policy.— Upon this ground I am decidedly of opinion, that it ought to receive a full discussion.— But I observe that your Lordships have a different impression on your minds.— I shall therefore acquiesce; for my purpose is to conciliate, I will not force myself upon the House, I do not provoke discussion, but I awake it.

The question was then put from the Wool-sack, and the bill passed nemine dissentiente. The House adjourned to Monday.

We are happy to inform the Public that No. 4556, drawn a Prize of 20,000l. the tenth day, centres intirely in this kingdom;— Mr. Perrin, Apothecary, of Castle-street, has a tenth; Mr. M'Cay, of Drogheda, a fifth; a Club of 21 subscribers in Drogheda, a fourth; and the remaining Shares by three different Gentlemen in this City.— What a happy circumstance if one of the 30,000l. becomes the Property of Irish Venturers!

It is hoped that the bill for regulating the office of constable, and for better enforcing the criminal process of the law, which stands committed for Wednesday next, will be duly attended to. This bill is of very great importance, and requires to be investigated with great deliberation. The object of the bill, however spacious its title, is to extend the provisions of the police law throughout the several counties in this kingdom, which, if carried into effect, will be found to operate both oppressive and expensive to the landholders of the different counties.

On the death of Mr. SAMUEL NEIL,

ONE OF THE PEOPLE CALLED QUAKERS.
WHEN Kings or Nobles meet their mortal doom,
And trembling yield to Death's superior sway;
What fate awaits them to their gilded tomb!
What pageant trappings mock their putrid clay!
In Parian stone their pompous virtues shine,
(Virtues which seldom in their lives appear);
Celestial forms surround their painted shrine,
And sculptur'd Cherubs drop a marble tear.
But o'er this corpse no plumes of sable fly,
No mimic tribe the Herald's baubles wave;
No formal grief, but friendship's genuine sigh,
Attends the Christian to his peaceful grave.
Yet, when the proud mausoleum melts away,
And time destroys the adamantine bust;

to Carrick, and standing the most indefatigable which, notwithstanding the most indefatigable exertions of the lightermen on board, entirely sunk her in a very short time.

We are credibly informed, that it is intended to introduce an additional duty on malt, of at least 2s. 6d. per barrel this session, which must affect whiskey by an additional duty of from 5d. to 6d. per gallon.—If such should be the case, we will be deprived of both foreign and home made spirits, so that any sort of malt drink will be better than nothing.

One of the workmen in Mr. Connell's distillery at Fethard, county Tipperary, Wednesday morning, took it into his head to amuse himself by firing at a mark, which he fixed up in the distillery-yard; he had levelled a fowling-piece at it, when, most unfortunately, at the moment he touched the trigger, a young man looked out of a door not five yards from the muzzle, and exactly in the range of the shot; he consequently received every grain of it in one of his temples, and died upon the spot.
