The Kings of Hungary and Prussia are said to have advanced a sum of money to the French Emigrants: but on condition, that the application of it shall be superintended by a Prussian and an Austrian Commissary.

At Coblentz a Prussian soldier has been shot for having taken it in his head to preach liberty to two citizens. His body served afterwards as a stool, on which the two citizens received each 50 blows with a stick. The Magistrates of Liege have visited all the shops, and seized all three coloured ribbands they met with. It is said that M. Dumourier is now at Coblentz.

The interesting cause between the nobility of Courland on the one part, and the Duke and the Commons on the other, is finally decided, and in almost every point against the nobility. By this decision the commons are entitled to sit in the States; nothing in which they are concerned can be determined on without their participation, and all the determinations of the States, in which they did not participate, are annulled. They are no longer under the exclusive jurisdiction of the nobles in matters that respect their privileges, but a special commission is to decide all matters in dispute between the two orders.

In England we build Coaches for all parts of the world,—but a Chariot was last week landed at the Custom-house which was built in America, and sent over to an English samily; this is the first instance of such an importation.
