To such a pitch of slander and malevolence has party prejudice, personal pique, and jaundiced envy, prevailed against a most respectable Character, that early last month a Pamphlet, of near 50 pages, well printed and on good paper, was most industriously circulated through Dublin—GRANTS. It is written apparently in a low Style, and vulgar Language, but evidently by no common hand; it is Entitled "Lessons to a young Chancellor," &c. but tho' composed with all the art that falsehood could invent, or hatred and malice tack together, it never will attain its desired purpose; as, happily, by wanting truth for its basis, the poison conveys an effectual antidote along with it.

We are sorry to hear, the Ann and Frances of Workington, Bowman Crosthwaite, Commander, bound for Galway, with a Cargo of Subscription Coal, was totally lost the 6th ult. near Loughendall, the Captain and Son, with all the Crew unfortunately perished.

The floods were so much out on the roads yesterday, that the Cork Post, whose arrival should be at 5 o'Clock in the morning, did not come in until 5 in the evening; nor the Dublin Post due at 11 last night until 6 this morning.

Yesterday morning John Parker, black-smith, was found dead in a field near Kilmurry, supposed to have perished the preceding night, through the inclemency of the weather.
