

General Moreau, reinforced by fresh troops from the left of the Rhine, seems to have divided his army into three corps. It was the right division that took possession of Offenbourg on the 26th ult. It directs its march to Friburg, forcing back the army of Conde, which must save itself by gaining the Lake of Constance and Tyrol. The center division is the one that drove the Austrians from the mountain of Knubis, and possessed itself of that important position.—The operations of the division on the left, which is descending the right banks of the Rhine, deserve the most particular attention. It has not only taken Stolhofen and Buhl, but also Friedenstadt, Olbach, and Baaden, after several bloody engagements, which took place on the 3d and 4th.

On the 4th, at night, the head-quarters were at the latter place. On the following day, at five in the morning, it attacked the Austrians in their position at Rastadt. The contest, which was obstinate and bloody, lasted till night, and terminated to the disadvantage of the Austrians, who were forced to retreat with great loss. On the 9th, there was another engagement in the plain before Rastadt, and in the defiles before Guersbach, in which the Austrians were again defeated, with the loss of 1300 prisoners, besides killed and wounded. On the 10th, the head-quarters were at Bitchel. General Ferino, a commander under General Moreau, occupied Ettenheim, the residence of the Cardinal de Rohan: his patrols reached to the Necker.

The armies of Moreau and Jourdan have probably by this time formed a junction between the Mayn and Necker, by that means excluding the Imperial army from the neighbourhood of Mannheim, Mentz, Franckfort, &c. and compelling them to retire to the heart of Germany, while Kellermann is penetrating through the country of the Grisons, to make himself the link which shall unite Buonaparte's army with the right wing of Moreau's.

20.—Ministers received advices from Sir Ralph Abercrombie, by which they have the satisfactory information, that on his appearance at Grenada and St. Vincent's, the enemy surrendered at discretion, and tranquillity was restored to those Islands. As soon as these Islands were reduced to subjection, the General sent a body of 7000 men to re-conquer Guadaloupe. Both the army and navy were in the highest health and spirits.—St. Lucie continued under the protection of Brigadier-General Moore, in a state of perfect quiet; and Sir Ralph Abercrombie was preparing to return to Europe, to save his feeble constitution from the hazard of the rainy season. He will go out again in the month of October.

JULY 22.]—Paris Journals of the 17th inst. reached us yesterday. They contain an account of new successes gained by the French troops on the Upper Rhine. After several partial actions between them and the Austrians, commanded by the Archduke in person, the French, under Gen. Moreau, have taken possession of the post of Ettingen, Dourlac, and Carlsruhe. Besides making great slaughter, they took 1600 prisoners.

On the departure of the Courier who brought this intelligence, the Archduke was assembling his army between Philipsburgh and the Necker, where he seemed disposed to risk a general engagement, before Jourdan's army, which was preparing to cross the Mayn, could place him between two fires.

Jourdan has already passed the Lahn: he established his head-quarters on the 9th inst. at Weilburgh, on the left side of that river, and was preparing to march to Franckfort. L'Eclair states, that news reached Paris on the 17th of the capture of that city.

Buonaparte, by his letter of the 6th inst. acquaints the Directory of new successes; but the particulars of which are not exactly detailed.—We merely learn that the garrison of Mantua continues to make forties, in the last of which the besieged sustained a considerable loss. [Star.

It has been for 30 days past confidently reported among the higher class, that Mr. Pitt will in the course of this week be called to the upper house. An event, should it prove true we may flatter ourselves to be the forerunner of a general peace.

The report that our Parliament will meet in October next is revived, on cogent reasons adduced in support of the measure on the ground of expediency.

The English have evacuated some of the Western posts on the frontiers of the United States of America, in consequence of the late treaty.

No accounts have yet been received from the fair of Balinasloe, but it is generally apprehended that the demand for wool will not be so considerable as what it has been for these some years past.

Though it is known to all the Parishioners of St. Mary's, and other Parishes in this City, that in case of an accidental fire, they are without the assistance of Fire Engines, yet they probably do not recollect, that there is an act of Parliament in force, that any Parish so neglecting to have the same, may be fined in the sum of 50l. by any going Judge of Assize.
