 you should transmit to me to be laid before him, a Return of the Number of Men that may be re-it to be thoroughly understood that the Bounty

I have the Honor to be,
 Your most obedient humble Servant,
 W. ELLIOT.

We hear that all the Corps of Yeomanry in this City, intend to parade to-morrow morning, and march to the several places of public worship, there to offer up their Thanksgivings to Almighty God, for his unspeakable mercy in rescuing this happy Island from the intended visit of French Tyrants.

Among the many instances that are already known of the loyalty of the inhabitants of the South of Ireland, we are assured by a respectable Gentleman, that on the late alarm of the French invasion, a number of Farmers in the Co. of Kerry, contiguous to the Sea Coast, voluntarily assembled and brought in all their Corn on oath, which they stacked, placing Fuzes around it, determined to set the whole on fire if a landing was effected, trusting to the honor of Government to make good their losses.

In an Appendix by Sir John Sinclair to a recent publication, the following curious trait of national character occurs:—"In Highland Regiments," says Sir John, "it is essential to make the men live better than they are commonly inclined to do. I found that some of the soldiers in my first Battalion had actually reduced their strength, and almost starved themselves, in order to send home money to their friends."—What a striking contrast is there, in this respect, between the Northerns, (so highly to their credit,) and the Southern inhabitants of this kingdom.
