

The report of the Indemnity Bill was received; several of the arguments of council were reproduced by Mr. Dawson and Mr. Moore against the clauses, providing that juries should find the malicious motive, and that Judges might certify against the quantum of damages.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed.

The order of the day being read for the second reading of the Dublin Watch Bill.

Mr. J. C. Beresford said, he should not now deliver his sentiments at large upon the subject of this Bill. An Hon. Gentleman, whom he did not now see in his place, had declared on a former night that the Corporation of Dublin would feel this bill as a high infringement on their privileges—this prediction was verified. They felt it indeed as a very gross attempt to violate their privileges, and he should be glad to know on what pretence it was that so gross an insult should be offered to the Corporation of the Metropolis as to take away from them at one stroke their chartered rights, which had never been attempted by any former bill on this subject, namely, the election of their Magistrates and Constables, which this bill would go directly to take from them, and put the appointment in the Crown. He would be glad to know from the servants of the Crown in that House, whether this was becoming treatment to that corporation which had on all occasions manifested its loyalty? which had given 5500l. for raising a regt. for the defence of the Empire, which had voted 2,000l. for a bounty to seamen for manning the navy, and paid 1,000l. to the Voluntary Contributions of the last year, or was it because during the horrors of the late rebellion, the loyalty of the Metropolis rallied round the Government and its inhabitants, night and day were indefatigable in their exertions for the defence of that Government and the suppression of rebellion, that they were now to be deprived of the Chartered Rights. Such a return for their services was in his mind but an ill-requital. He should not say more, than that he spoke the sense of his Constituents, and he should oppose the bill in every stage.

The Right Hon. Mr. Ogle fully coincided in the sentiments expressed by his Hon. Friend and Colleague. He would not say there were not many defects in the present watch system highly capable of melioration; but could not this be done without taking away, by one sweeping measure, the chartered rights and franchises of the metropolis, without even so much as a pretence alleged that any of those rights had been abused in the exercise of the Magistrates elected by the Corporation. He fully agreed in the expression, that the bill was certainly a high insult to the Citizens of Dublin, and he should oppose it in every stage.

Mr. Secretary Cooke could not conceive how the Right Hon. and Hon. Members could construe this bill into an insult to the metropolis or a violation of its chartered rights. The Government did not intend under this bill to interfere with the election of the Magistrates, but only with the appointment of the Chief Constables, whereby a more efficient control on the administration of the watch establishment would be obtained, of which it so obviously stood in need.

Mr. Beresford could see the bill in no other light than that he at first described. He had no objection that the appointments of Constables should be subject to the approbation of Government, but he could never assent to deprive the Corporation of its right to the choice. He thought the bill should be withdrawn, in order at Mount-Shannon, cut and bound in Trusses of 56lbs. weight, as pacified in the London market. We have heard that the Lord Chancellor, with his usual public spirit, has supplied the Forage Master of the Artillery with a quantity of Hay, which was not otherwise to be procured in this neighbourhood. Mr. Allen, his Lordship's Steward, deserves much praise, for setting an example of sending Hay to market in Trusses, which we hope will be followed in future, instead of the srovenly fraudulent method heretofore practised, by venders of that article in this city.

Connor, Edward, and Thomas Gorman, who were tried by the General Court Martial in this City, for the robbery of James D'Arcy, Esq; were this morning taken to New Geneva, from thence to be transported.
