Abercromby, whose force is estimated at about 20,000 men. The success of Europe will now be upon Egypt, and intelligence from that quarter will for some time come to excite the most lively interest. You may expect advices from General Abercromby in a few days.

On Wednesday, Colonel Howarth inspected the Brigade of the Royal Irish Artillery, quartered in this City for some time past, under the command of Captain Crawford, which, in consequence of the Union, are to be incorporated into the British Artillery:—The Colonel passed the highest eulogiums on the Military character of Captain Crawford, whose Brigade does honor to the service.—We have to regret, that the new regulation has caused Captain Crawford to resign his command in the Artillery, going out on full pay; his merit, as a most excellent Officer and Soldier, is, however, so universally known, that he has been appointed to be Major in the North Cork Militia, at present quartered in Wicklow.
