the occasion for which they were convened was announced by the High Sheriff in one of the best adapted speeches we have at any time listened to. An unanimous address to his Majesty, expressed the zeal and loyalty of the county of Cork, and a strong sense of that indignation which the arrogance and injustice of the enemy had excited; and a subsequent Address to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant gratefully testified the advantages which this country has obtained under his mild and temperate administration. The spirited example of the city was followed by resolutions promising bounties to such persons as may enter his Majesty's naval service at this port before the 1st of July next.
