DIED.—On Sunday in the 80th year of his age, Stephen Roche, Jun, Esq; the oldest Merchant of this City; the more truly shall his character be delineated, the more eminently will his virtues appear; to his friends and fellow citizens it may be unnecessary to repeat, what fifty years of social and commercial intercourse have established;—they have established a Character, that never said what was untrue, nor did that was unjust, or unkind; he served numbers, e distressed nor injured none he wished prosperity to all; the advancement of industrious youth was his particular pleasure, and his wealth flowed in those channels, which the subsequent establishment of Banks in this City maintain for the furtherance of Trade and Commerce; to the benefit of which, before that period his resources were devoted, nor was his life confined to the circle of individual existence.—He leaves a numerous and affluent Family, educated to his example, and placed in business of the first respectability. His virtues, Providence rewarded even in this life, it conferred on him the happiness of seeing his children, and many of his grand-children, acting prosperously for themselves; and when called from it, after passing through life with health almost uninterrupted, and faculties unimpaired to the last, had scarcely a wish unsatisfied,—in a word, no man practised with less deviation, that christian maxim of not doing by nother, what he would not wish to have done to himself.—Monday, in Bridge-str. Thomas Bonfield Esq; late an extensive Merchant in Bourdeaux, where his hospitality was conspicuous particularly to Irishmen,—Mr. Bonfield left France shortly after the French Monarch was put to death, and has since resided in this his native City.
