On the late Mr. J. BAGGOT, Mathematician, Ballingarry.

Bright Learning must deplore great Baggot's fate,
By ruthless Death of him deprived of late ;
Whose brilliant themes with able science glow'd,
In vast profusion from his bosom flow'd.
Extinguish'd Lamp, alas ! thy light no more
Diffuses rays on Nature's richest store ;
With beaming radiance like immortal lore,
Display'd by Newton sage, in days of yore—
O ! genuine parts, too soon immers'd in clay,
For ages hence to moulder and decay ;
The prey of insects, within a grave reclin'd,
His scientific power remains confined.
Ah ! mighty Death—thou cause of mortal woe,
When I reflect on this untimely blow ;
Confusion sad—brings thy grim visage nigh,
Distracts my muse, and bursts a doleful sigh.
Must I lament, and yet lament in vain.
