DRYDEN.

We have often prided ourselves on Limerick's ing compared to this that and the other beauti- city, and why not in its striking likeness in ny parts even to Imperial Rome: for the num- of our old Fabricks patched up by speculating usebrokers, and cattered to the miserable poor, not be better described than by the same writer: Vos urbem colimus tenui tibicine fultam Magna parte sui; nam si labentibus obstat Illicus & veteris rimæ contextit hiatum, euros pendente jubet dormire ruina.
"But we inhabit a weak City here,
"Which Butresses and Props but scarcely bear,
"And tis the Village Mason's daily calling
"To keep the World's Metropolis from falling
"To cleanse the Gutters and the Chinks to close,
"Secure the Swinish Multitudes repose."

Yesterday by order of the Mayor, 3 persons e put in stocks, for refusing to accept real t halfpence—we hear that some shopkeepers e also fined for similar offences.

We cannot but highly commend his Worship, his instance, for resisting the progress of a chievous caprice, which, if unchecked, would sathen most serious inconvenience to the com- nity at large.—In a late number of this Paper expressed regret and indignation at seeing bus- s impeded, and retail trade deranged by the sal of halfpence unquestionably legal. We conceived that this necessary part of the cur- y of this country, would be instantly red- uced to free circulation by his Worship's having humanely announced, by proclamation, the consequences awaiting further perseverance his despicable and illegal abuse. But from the innance of such misconduct, it would appear the suppressing of this system, evidently cond- ed by dishonesty, and stretched to an impu- violation of the law, is not to be effected by mild superintendance of magisterial vigilance. re public officer it requires an energy deter- d to pursue such delinquency to exemplary shment, and in every citizen a prompt, per- l interference in bringing the abettors of this b, sordid conspiracy against trade, to pub- stice.

fatal instance of the want of caution in ling guns, &c. occurred in Tralee.—William y, mason, on coming into his kitchen, ob- d a gun which he took up for the purpose, it d, of removing it to a place of safety, and f the reach of some children who were in ouse; however, while in the act of putting recautionary and laudable intention into ef- he, by some unaccountable fatality, or ardness in handling the piece, which was d with powder and shot, the contents were ured, and the entire lodged immediately the left arm of his daughter, who happened seated, with a child on her knee, at not than the distance of a yard; the conse- e, of course, was instant death. We re- o add, that she was the mother of four ; children, and far advanced in a state of ancy.

Monday night the 6th instant, Captain s, of the Fethard cavalry, having heard n armed banditti was to attack the house of el Haffernan, of Barretstown, near Fe- to rob him of fire-arms, called on a few corps and a party of the 23d light dra- with which he proceeded on foot to the about three miles, and there concealed f and his party in the out-offices, when after they saw some of the villains ap- the door, armed, about two o'clock at with a gun and blunderbuss, and without Bright was the dawn of Neris's day,

And gaily sped her early hours;
Young Hope had plann'd her future way,
And fancy strew'd that way with flow'rs.

Her bosom knew no secret woes,
No dread of ill, no thought of care:
Fair was her cheek—and fresh the rose
Which youth and health had painted there.

Oh! sweetly mild, beyond compare,
Did nature form her matchless fair;
And virtue, thro' each feature fair,
Beam'd with a more expressive grace!

It oft suffus'd her downy cheek
With blushing tints of innocence;
And taught her artless lips to speak
The dictates, meek, of guiltless sense.

Yes—spotless, fair, and pure was she,
The loveliest lily of the plain!
But, snatch'd from weeping friends and me,
She ne'er will grace our fields again!

Ah; whither now is Neris, fled?
Transplant'd to what colder sky,
Does this fair lily hang the head,
Neglect'd, droop, decline, and die?

"Too fair a flower for this rude clime,"
She fled from each delight'd eye!
Ah! fled, in youth's—in beauty's prime—
To happier realms beyond the sky?
"Ah! molliter ossa quiescant!"
