

Curran, Attorney General.
Counsellor Bushe, to be still Solicitor General.
The latter Gentleman was very strongly recommended by Mr. Grattan. Mr. G. Ponsonby seemed also very warmly interested in the promotion of Mr. Curran. General Lord Hutchinson was offered the elevated situation of commander in chief of his Majesty's forces in Ireland. It was said that the appointments were made out on Saturday, but that is not the fact. His Lordship has, however, this day declined it. At present Mr. Grattan does not intend to accept any place, but will cordially co-operate with Government.

LIMERICK, FEBRUARY 18, 1806.

In the sudden and unexpected changes which have taken place in the political circle, it becomes necessary for every Print professing the public good, not to be hurried away by the current of disapprobation of the former, nor to be allured by the full-tide of the popularity of the present Administration: but to maintain a steady course with the strictest and most religious regard to impartiality, neither approving or disapproving the measure of any man or men, but stating every act fairly and candidly on the broad basis of independence and public duty. Under this idea we cannot withhold informing our readers that, Mr. Fox's agreeing to the measure of the Public's paying off Mr. Pitt's personal debts has been marked with
