Last Saturday night, the Theatre in Waterford was broke open, and the scenery torn in pieces, by some wanton villains, who also entered the ward-room, and in like manner destroyed a very valuable dress, worn by the Bear in the entertainment of Valentine and Orson.—A similar attempt was again made on Sunday night, supposed by the same ruffians.

FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER—1806.

Morning dress is a plain single breasted frock of brown or olive with metal buttons; the waist-coat, of striped toiline, any colour, is rather longer than formerly; pantaloons, drabs of all degrees, in general worn with hussar boots; the hat is somewhat broader in the brim, and the hair, though less affecting the antique, is much dressed out as before.

Evening dress is almost universally of dark bottle green double breasted coat with buttons of the same colour, cover or basket; the sleeves wide, but to fit at the shoulders, and the skirt reaching down to the hollow of the knee. The waistcoat white and the breeches a light drab.—The hair is invariably powdered, dressed high in front, and somewhat over the forehead in curls. Buckles or strings at the knees, and in the knees are equally worn, but buckles are decidedly the most dressed.

General Observations for the present Month.

Fashion, tasteful yet fantastic, merciless yet idolized, seats herself in her weather cock throne, on the dome of elevated Pleasure, and dictates her unappealable injunctions to the votaries of the enchantress within.

The neckcloth, should, by no means, be too greatly puffed out: but should be neatly united in front with a large unspread bow. Dark bottle green coats will be as generally worn this season, as those of brown colour were last winter.

For a morning-dress frock coats will be prevalent; those of an olive green hue, with a black velvet collar, will be the most universal. Fancied waistcoats of all manufactures may be worn with this kind of coat; but fashion ordains the invariable use of dark blue, or light-coloured kerseymer pantaloons, and half-boots. The boots must rise somewhat higher in the leg than has lately been the custom, and the toes of them should be formed into a perfect semi-circle.

Full dress coats will likewise be made of a dark green cloth, double-breasted and will possess the similar ornaments of a black velvet collar. Single-breasted white waist-coats, and light-coloured kerseymer breeches will be in much estimation. Either flesh-coloured or snow-white silk stockings, fashion now considers as elegant.

The hair, for morning dress, should be cut ala Titus; for full dress it should be powdered.—Buckles in the shoes are employed in full dress; but ribbands are allowed in afternoon or dinner dress.
