Limerick, June 10.

... from the Diary of a Com-Medical Staff of Sir John Moore's army, ctors of the Limerick Chronicle, from the illing into the hands of the French, to his Corunna on the 21st May, for England : Plymouth, May 23, 1809. umstance of my being left at Lugo, the ca-cia in Spain, in charge of the sick of our as proceed on to Corunna to embark, I take ust be known, therefore shall not occupy a with detailing the subject at large, but put ur information a few occurrences which d since. On the 6th Jan. I received orders at Lugo—on the night of the 8th, our army d early on the morning of the 9th, the first e French entered, and with so little noise ompany of a regiment would march into r did they plunder much but provisions, for h were so fatigued and hungry, that they ooked for something to satiate their cra-; but the second division which came in, ve chiefly those from Portugal) did not let a quite so easy. The first Officer who vi-you must know I remained quiet in the bbed me of my pistols and some rum—the hird (two Surgeons) stole my two cases of ments, and though wounded and sick were in, would not leave me sufficient to dress a with. I had now about 160 patients, but the number having increased to 250, the trouble was so great as to bring on a fever, and both my assistant and self, confining us d room for six weeks; on our recovery, all perfectly settled—we formed many acquaint-the French Officers, most of whom were ay us attention, and felt ourselves tolerably The French, one and all, speak of our gh Spain as being one of the most masterly l, and say Sir John Moore must have been eral living, (that is one of them) or our whole ave been taken; and in regard to our beat-Corunna, they say it was Souit's fault, for more determined, we must have been cut know different, for it was the English balls did the business. After the first month or we were treated very well, being allowed ns, and frequently asked to the Officers' On the 19th Jan. Lieut. Brennan, 14th foot,
