

The bloom and opening rose imbued beauty,
Softness and sweetest innocence they wore,
And look'd like Nature in the world's first spring.

Lord Glenworth next day gave a petit dinner to a few friends, who enjoyed in the highest degree the calm of such a day after the storm of such a night.

Yesterday terminated this very numerous and fashionable meeting, and we feel that we are only the organ of the public sentiment, when we say, that never was a meeting in this country which gave more universal satisfaction. To undertake the conduct of races we conceive to be no moderate enterprise, and to conduct them thro' all the varied stages of the course, the ordinary, and the ball, without a dispute, or even a difference, we conceive to be no moderate achievement.—This merit Mr. O'Brien has had, and his friends congratulate him upon the result.—This was heretofore considered so formidable an undertaking as to require a combination of three or four persons for the purpose, but we perceive that in such hands one conductor is not only sufficient, but has the same advantage over a combination, that a good monarchy has over an aristocracy.—Nothing could be more fortunate than Mr. O'Brien was in adjourning for a few days from dreadfully wet weather to weather that was delightfully fine.—This he did not merely of his own determination, but at the desire of the public, and of those who had horses to run, and who remonstrated with him upon the impossibility of any sport, or any safety to the horses or riders. He accordingly adjourned for four days, and the event was every thing he could wish, never was there finer weather, never was there a more brilliant meeting, and never better sport, particularly in the great contest on Saturday for three heats between Babe and Slug which was allowed by the best judges to be the ze plus ultra of the turf.

Mr. Ryder has obtained leave to bring in a bill to provide for the interchange of the service of the different militias of England and Ireland. Mr. Ryder said, that one provision in the bill would be, that not more than one-fourth of the Irish militia should serve in England at one time, or one-third of the British in Ireland; and that the British should not continue longer than two years at a time in Ireland, or the Irish longer than three years in England, and not again to be called upon till their turn arrived.—The debates on this subject, shall appear in our next.

The catholic petition is to be brought forward on 31st inst.
