on this occasion the line of moderation rather than that of severity.—and therefore not to proceed on the trial against the several other traversers, indicted for a breach of the convention act. At present we cannot entertain a doubt, that the persons engaged in those assemblies, after all that has passed, will cease to offend against the law; and that all these who have an honest and honourable, and a legitimate object in view, will not persevere in exhibiting a bad example to the lower order of the people. We trust and are satisfied that lenity and moderation of government in this instance will produce a salutary effect on the conduct of every catholic whose views and designs are honest and honourable; and if any evil disposed persons shall again be found to disturb the public peace, we have no doubt that the firmness of government and the strong arm of the law will suppress and put down such mischievous designs.

I also feel pleasure in stating, that it is our intention to include the criminal information in the case of the King, against the Earl of Fingal, and to enter a "Nolla Prosequi," in all the prosecutions now pending.

My Lords.—I here feel myself called on to say of the noble Duke placed at the head of his Majesty's government in this country that it has ever been his object, and the spirit of his administration not only to do equal justice, but to act in the most conciliating manner to every class of his Majesty's subjects!!

Mr. Bunnower said he thought it right to state on the part of the Earl of Fingall, that his Lordship, in the whole proceedings, had acted under the first legal opinions. That it never could have been his intention either to disturb the public peace or to violate the law of the land. Lord Fingall and the gentlemen of the catholic committee had wished and endeavoured to obtain a special verdict in order to have the law finally settled.
He (Mr. Burrows) did not mean to say, that it was not now settled; but that it had ever been the anxious wish of his clients to put the question in that train so as to have the law decided by the dernier resort. There were various modes by which that object might have been effected, and the Attorney-General would do him the justice to admit, that he had made several propositions to the law officers of the crown, that the law arising on the convention act as applicable to the catholic committee, should be submitted to the opinion of the dernier resort.

He was instructed to state, that Mr. Kirwan had left town on particular business. Not having expected that he would be brought up for judgment so soon as tomorrow.

The Court fixed Thursday for giving judgment,
