seller Casey, in a most argumentative display, explained the nature of the different charters to the citizens of Limerick by several motions from the reign of King John down to that of I. as a grateful return for their unshaken loyalty in the course of this able and interesting speech, occasion to mention, that the King's Island was then a place of public amusement, though now made private property. A general cry of Counsellor O'Connell for some interrupted the meeting, when Mr. Mich. Arthur ed the chair, and requested that Counsellor ell would be called on to favor the meeting with tions on this important subject, when he imly arose amidst loud cheering and acclamation. sellor O'Connell (as soon as order was restored) ed the chair in a speech seldom equalled, and urpassed—he went as far back as the year 1146, k a most comprehensive and flattering review conduct of the citizens of Limerick, from the Oliver Cromwell to the arrival of King William, capitation that followed, proving the unshally, bravery, and untarnished honor of the of Limerick. In the most gratifying and feelmer he introduced the different proofs given by and particularly, that though the capitation signed at the period of the arrival of a French the Hanson, with a large reinforcement of men, c. sufficient to renew the battle, yet as their hpledged, they would not break it—they had hey could fight, but would not betray. He concluded by Gentlemen, I am your servant—command me, shall be obeyed. sellor Casey moved the thanks of the meeting ble Chairman, and assured them, from his owledge, that his Lordship would not relax in for the interest of the citizens of Limerick.
