and crossed the river Douro at Regoa, followed by two brigades of Guards, and five battalions of the King's German Legion, with a large body of Cavalry and Artillery; they are all gone for Braganza, a town in the north of Portugal, on the frontiers of Spain; there they halt till joined by the 1st, 8d, 8th &

6th divisions of the Army, which are now crossing the river higher up the country .- The Army is divided into three parts, one part consisting of the 1st, 3d, and 6th divisions, are called the left wing, o northern army, and are to be commanded by our old and worthy friend and good General, Sir Thos.

Graham; the right wing, or southern army, is to consist of an equal number of English regiments, and commanded by General Hill; and Lord Wellington commands the centre. Thus we enter Spain in three Divisions, and at three different points, our wing enters into the province of Gallicia, Lord Wellington enters Leon, and General Hill enters Castile, while a large English and Spanish army, under Gen.

Murray advances from Valentia, and from the south of Spain-The whole force, from yesterday's returns, consists as follow, viz. 60,000 British, 50,000 Por-enguese, and 80,000 Spaniards; from the latest and best information we have, the French have 40,000 in Balamanca, 20,000 in Astorga, and 13,000 in Valen-
