IRISH LITERATURE.

Irwin's New Geography—We feel gratified in being able to announce, that this highly interesting Work is at length published, the construction of which, in our estimation, renders it as useful and complete a Treatise on Geography as has appeared in print for a series of years—It at once presents to the Teacher and Learner, a system every way calculated to edify the one, and add precipitancy to the instruction of the other. From this view, and the great utility of the Author's former Publication, we can have no doubt of the good effects resulting from this inimitable Work.—(See Advt.
