strong, exclusive of the wounded, surrendered prisoners of war on the 9 h, when they defiled from the Castle and laid down their arms, and were immediately put on board the transports which were in waiting to be conveyed to England, and had parted St. Sepastian's with the James and Anne, and the Hariot, also arrived in this Port, which parted the convoy, with these prisoners, of the Land's End, bearing N. E. by E. distance 7 leagues to join the main Army, which was posted two leagues from Passage, and it was suppose the would immediately proceed to the reduction of Pampiona. The besieging artillery engaged in the reduction of St. Sebastian's was re-embarked; the whole Town was reduced to rubbish, and the Castle a perfect rid lie, without one sound gun upon the hatteries. The wounded of the Allies and the Enemy were removed to Sr. Andero .-

Previous to the surrender of the Castle the Engineers had cut trenches within a pistol shot of the enemy's batteries. The whole appearance was most horrible, as owing to the great confusion that existed, the greater number of the dead remained unburied. Capt. Adams did not hear of the death of any General officer. There was not much descructive firing from the castle, from the day of the storming of the town to the surrender of the castle, our losses are represented not to have exceeded 70 or 80 within that time. The enemy spoke in terms of the greatest wonder of the galiancry and skill of the assailants and particularly of the battery of the 17 heavy guns, as they thought it utterly impossible, that such heavy artillery could be brought to the spot

Capt. reports that the Castle surrendered by Capitulation on the 9th, and that he visited it five or six hours after the Allies got possession. After the Town had been taken, the Allies immediately commenced erecting a battery of 17 guns, twenty-four and forty-eight pounders, which commented playing on the Castle with dreadful fury in two days after. The firing continued without intermission, until an offer of surrender was made by the Commandant upon terms which Lord Wellington, who is stated to have been in the Trenches,
