To enlarge upon the rare combination of beauty and accomplishments, which were united to render this amiable young Lady truly interesting to Society, is a task, to the performance of which we confess ourselves inadequate; more particularly, were we to attempt the delineation of a mind, which might be fairly denominated the mirror of virtue, taste, and sensibility.

The extended circles of respectable Society thro' which this charming young Lady moved, with universal admiration, during her short stay among us, can but appreciate the irreparable loss, which her very afflicted connexions must experience, in being deprived of so rare a gem!

“Early, bright, transient, pure as morning dews,
“She sparkled, was exhaled, and flew to HEAVEN!
