few days back, the unfortunate distance at the fair of Goolden, and have nothing to change the impression, that it is time. If any one thing, more than another, the minds of the lower order with a view, by which they are governed and protection under which, while it remains as so many blessings, it would be the arisen out of that very calamity. The high and proud, though no more than a public duty, summoned individually, all the persons who fell in that unlucky tumult, and are now capable of giving evidence of the truth, after divine service, Lord Hawarden, General, and Mr. Creagh (the High Sheriff), and (for part of the time) Mr. Wm. Creagh's, attended by an immense concourse of one of whom, who could, or said kind of testimony as to the death of the killed, was examined. After a minute or two of hours continuance, the magistrates, in order fairly before the proper tribunal for the sake of information against Anderson, one of them, and Flynn, one of the Thomastown on many former occasions, rendered so

We cannot do without congratulating the country on this laborious, and open, enquiry, set by rank, and which we have, before now, the best auxiliaries to the fair and even disposed peasant with confidence in the wisdom of his ministers, or to appal the dissolute by a commission

it succeeded very shortly that of Goolden, or battery, and with little noise, Lord's usual attention to the public safety, had Wilcocks for a number of his establishments, gentleman promptly furnished under the chief constable Mr. Kelly, to whose unequal highest credit is due. It is whimsical, whom it is so much the fashion to decry, sought for out of the barony to which their office, to preserve the peace amongst the bearing baronies; and as we are fond of it is to be observed, that Caher is not inconsiderably outside its boundary, in 1844

The troops just arrived at Portsmouth, from the late expedition to New Orleans, are ordered to proceed forthwith to the Downs, on their way to Belgium, without waiting to be trans-shipped to other vessels for more convenient conveyance, as was at first intended; the importance of a speedy junction with the Duke of Wellington having superseded the minor motives for the other arrangement. The officers, who have been permitted to land at Portsmouth, and to come up to town, are under orders to join again at Deal, on the arrival of the ships in the Downs

The arrival of these troops, we understand, is anxiously desired by the illustrious Duke, most of them having fought and distinguished themselves under him in the campaigns in the Peninsula, and in the south of France. In point of actual service, these regiments may, in fact, be considered the flower of the British army; and as such they were selected for the enterprises upon which they have been recently employed; and, although from particular circumstances they have not all been equally successful in the late instance, we are confident that when replaced under their old commander, "the ten thousand," as the soldiers familiarly but forcibly called the Duke of Wellington, they will win their way to glory with equal vigour and certainty as before.

The prominent feature of the British army in Belgium at present is its train and corps of artillery, which are probably the finest ever attached to any force. The cavalry also are considered a very fine body. But the infantry regiments in general are considered unequal; on account of the very circumstance of the best regiments having been hitherto all on the American service.

The Treasurer to the Fever Hospital, has received from Mrs. Twaites, £2 14s. 2d. and from G. H. Ievers, Esq. one Guinea (the latter an annual subscription) for that charity. Though the inhabitants of this populous and wealthy city must be aware of the unusual prevalence of fever this season, they will perhaps be surprised to learn that from the 1st to the 29th May, fifty one persons in fever have been admitted into the Hospital, of whom to this day 23 were discharged cured, 31 are in a progressive state of recovery, and of the entire number only one died, and he within a few hours after admission, more in consequence of hurts received from a fall than from the effects of fever—probably in no part of the empire could there be found a more striking instance of skill and success in the treatment of fever than the present, nor can any thing more strongly evince the utility of this institution, or call more loudly for liberal and permanent support for it. Had not the Fever Hospital been open for the admission of those 51 individuals, it is impossible to say where the ravages of contagion would have stopped—yet this most valuable institution is deeply in debt, and its funds for the present exhausted.
