CRIM. CON.

LORD NORBURY'S CHARGE.

IN THE CASE OF GUTHRIE v. STERNE.

Gentlemen of the Jury—Notwithstanding that this trial has taken up much time, it is not a case of difficult disquisition. It is an action by which the plaintiff seeks to recover compensation in damages for criminal conversation with his (plaintiff's) wife

Gentlemen—With my friend, Mr. Burrowes, (who has, with his usual ability, stated the defendant's case,) I am not of opinion, that there exists any doubt, either as to the propriety of our courts of law adopting this action, or of the justice of its being one which ought to be countenanced by conscientious jurors—because I know of no cause of action that calls so loudly for retribution to the party injured. Mr. Burrowes seemed to think, and attempted to shew, that the remedy of trial by jury for this species of private wrong should have been transferred from the civil to the criminal jurisdiction.—Thank God, gentlemen, we have no Star Chamber in Ireland: and you are the best and most competent tribunal to decide on the nature and extent of such injuries as the party in this case complains of.

Gentlemen in my opinion, the evidence given on this trial has completely sustained the plaintiff's case; and the only matter left for your decision is, the quantum of damages to which you may think him entitled.

Gentlemen I am extremely glad that the trial of this case has given an opportunity to the young gentleman, who stated the plaintiff's case, of delivering a speech, which we have all heard with unmixed delight—a speech, containing, in my opinion as brilliant a display of pure classic eloquence, and some of the finest effusions of manly feeling as ever fell from the lips of any gentleman in these courts.

Gentlemen, I am glad you were not called on to give your verdict immediately after the delivery of this beautiful moral lecture, because I fear it might have carried you too far in your ascertaining the compensation for the injury, and there is nothing that I would so strongly recommend to jurors as moderation in damages.

Gentlemen, Mr. Phillips has detailed to you the leading features of this case, and has drawn on his fancy for a striking picture of the defendant, Mr. Peter William Baker Dunstable Sterne. In portraying the character of a seducer, this learned gentleman has (if I may use a nautical term) "raked this gentleman fore and aft, from stem to stern." But bad

The following description of horses, are exempt from the assessed tax:—Any horse, &c. solely used for the purpose of husbandry, on land occupied by the owner of such horse, or for the purpose of drawing any cart or carriage, not liable to duty, although such horse may be rode on the following occasions, viz:—Returning, going to, or coming from a place, to which a burden may be carried by any such horse, or for going for medical assistance, or for the purpose of going to or from any fair or market, or place of public worship or to or from any election for members of parliament; or to or from any court of justice; one horse, for drawing any carriage with two wheels, not chargeable with any duty, by a person occupying a farm and making a livelihood solely thereby; or by any ecclesiastic not possessing one hundred pounds a year income, whether from ecclesiastical preferment or otherwise

Friday, an old offender, named Thomas Nihill, was recognised among a number of recruits for the Clare Militia, who had come from Kilrush to be attested, and taken into custody. This man, in 1802, at the Summer Assizes, was indicted for the murder of James M'Namara; the murder was perpetrated the fair night of Spencilhill, he then quitted the country, and had not since been heard of. He was committed under warrant from Francis Swiry, Esq.

On Thursday evening last, a young woman (Mary O'Brien) of Pennywell, in this city, being disappointed in marriage, drowned herself in the Canal; she piled her clothes regularly on the bank, and put a large stone on them to keep them steady, which readily ascertained the fatal spot, and the unhappy victim.

Yesterday morning, the body of a still born infant was found drowned in the river here of the Castle Barrack, supposed to be thrown in by its unnatural parent.

CLONMEL, JUNE 21.—A few nights since, a house at Noard, near the Horse and Jockey, was attacked by some armed villains, who broke the windows and fired a shot thro' the door, which lodged two bullets near the bed, where two persons were sleeping, but who providentially escaped without injury. A notice was at the same time posted on the house, commanding the owner to quit his farm. Mr. Wilson, the superintendent magistrate for Ellogarty, and Kilmenna, instantly proceeded with a party of his mounted constables and after a short pursuit and search, succeeded in apprehending a man named Wm. Carroll, who has been identified as the principal in the outrage. The apprehension even of one of those miscreants so immediately after the offence, will, we hope have some effect in checking their diabolical spirit.
