Mr. Lidwill erry in September, and examine wit- e's witnesses proceeded there; Mr. o proceed there also; he replied, that ill, and that he could not attend to e was applied to; he then replied, life he would never give his opinion

The expence of witnesses cost Mr. impossible to get Mr. Lidwill to and the usual rule was put on defen- off, that the action would be proto be turned out; there was a huzza for O'Mullane, and a cry of "to a certain place with O'Doherty;" he was immediately turned out, and treated in a harsh manner. Indictments were preferred by O'Doherty against the priest—he then stood in an awkward predicament; a meeting of Priests and friends was called; the present defendant was chosen his advocate; a fee was sent to him; he went down and examined, and cross-examined the witnesses; he spoke to evidence, and addressed the Jury, and notwithstanding all his eloquence, poor Father O'Mullane was convicted. As his parishioners might not after that have had so high a respect for their Priest, something, therefore, must be done, and what, think you, was the expedient of Father O'Mullane's friends—a triumphal car was prepared, and the unwilling advocate was placed upon it—never did a Bishop more unwillingly receive his mitre—he was born in triumph over the wooden bridge: the toll-gate fell prostrate before him, and he was put into his carriage. We shall leave the Priest in jail in Derry, suffering penance for the crime committed in his own chapel. The Barrister arrives in town—we are now coming to the serious suffering of Mr. Magee. Before O'Gorman came to town, the Derry Journal had published the trial of O'Mullane. Mr. Reilly, who conducts the printing department of the Dublin Evening Post, was about to publish the trial as it appeared in the Londonderry Journal; on the 19th of January, the account was prepared for the press and just as it was going to be published, Mr. O'Gorman came to town, and called to Magee, who, for 15 years, was his particular friend; and who, by the aid of his press, raised him in the estimation of the public, and also in his profession. Mr. Reilly having seen Mr. O'Gorman, congratulated him, and said he was going to publish the account from the Derry Journal—do not, says O'Gorman, the evidence is mutilated and my speech is horribly given; I shall myself give you the true and authentic report—Reilly then consented not to publish it, until he got his account of the trial, if he was permitted by Mr. Magee. O'Gorman went to Magee, and promised if the proof sheets were submitted to his inspection before they were put to press, he would give him the correct report; Mr. Magee conceived that his confidential friend, knowing that he spoke to evidence would supply him with an accurate report. Mr. Hogan from the Evening Post Office, waited upon Mr. O'Gorman, and on reading the evidence, Mr. O'Gorman exclaimed, "yes the rascal did blacken himself on his examination," and he wrote a comment, and desired Hogan to bring the manuscript to Mr. Magee.—The Catholic Board were sitting, and it was moved that Mr. O'Gorman should report the proceedings at Derry. It was then said the account in the Derry paper was false, and it became necessary to hear it from the defendant himself, thereby insinuating that it was a partial and infamous conviction. Mr. O'Gorman then stated to the assembly that he was taken by surprise, and he warranted the facts stated in the Evening Post to be true. On the 24th of January, 1814, Mr. Reilly himself having got the papers from Hogan, waited upon Mr. O'Gorman for his speech, which he got in his own hand writing. On the 25th of January, he called at the Evening Post Office, and asked Reilly would it be published that night—he was told not; he called on the 26th and was nearly outrageous, when he was informed it could not then be published, saying, it would ruin the catholic cause, as the Derry report would be believed it was therefore published, and as was before agreed, Mr. O'Gorman corrected the proof sheets, and made alterations in his own hand writing. If it contained a false statement the defendant must be conscious of it; no man could be so but himself, as he was at the trial and spoke to evidence; no one in the establishment of the Evening Post could have known any thing about it. Here Mr. Rolleston read part of the publication as taken from the manuscript. If a man, said he, writes his own speech, he will make himself the ablest lawyer, and the most eloquent advocate; having read another passage, he said, always in beginning a speech, say we, from thence it will not be understood to be you; he then read the part of the publication for which the action was brought against Mr. Magee. On the 1st of February, Mr. Magee, having read over the comment, ordered an apology to be inserted; Mr. O'Gorman read the apology, and instantly came to the office and asked why it dare be published. Reilly said it was by Mr. Magee's desire that he was afraid an action might be brought—what, said O'Gorman, he bring an action; do you know the fellow? Damn the action he will he will ever bring; give me the manuscript, and I will put it in my own hand writing, and if he should commence an action against him I will be responsible. When the writ was served upon Mr. Magee, he sent it to Mr. O'Gorman, who sent a gentleman with it to Mr. Magee. Mr. Magee said he would acknowledge the publication; he sent again to Mr. O'Gorman; Mr. O'Gorman sent him word he would indemnify him; that he would give Mr. Randal M'Donacl, and Mr. Nicholas Mahon security. Mr. Magee entered an appearance; a declaration was filed; Mr. Day Law Agent to Mr. Magee, waited on Mr. O'Gorman, to get the securities; Mr. Day shewed him a copy of the declaration, which O'Gorman read over, and very coolly said, he ought to plead a justification—oh, no, said Day, you promised securities, do you defend the action: I will be your
