

and a disgraceful and ignominious wickedness the most awful! But to Shortly after I arrived at Philadelphia in Germantown, where I remained under the protection of a relative, and made studies which are first pursued by a nobleman. It was then evinced which could I was to be doomed to the most exalted between Heaven and earth, my light to unknown regions, or that an army awaited my footsteps. At the age of 17, I was placed under the tuition of the Hon. Daniel Clarke, of New York, whose wealth and honorable distinction of my life from the more ordinary paths of life; and I believed myself at liberty to tread the more humble worms of the dust. For the angels and plenty showered their blessings on me in all the plenitude and extravagance of odious and detestable. My uncle, by adoption, endeavoured to restrain my course, and effect my return to virtuous bearing in disposition, and ungovernable that my will was my only guide, and the wholesome lessons which an affectionate—alas! how vainly! to impress on me of an unfeeling libertine! I gave loose to dissipation, and embraced, with the shadow of human bliss, and grasped at reality except in name. Thus passed my life, which had they been devoted to innovation laid the foundation of a good old comfort to my relatives! But all the assurances of fortune—the golden assurances of my happiness in life, if I would have been contented—had no effect on my previous course in the stream of a pleasing delusion, to crime, and I was banished from the affection and friend, and was compelled to sustain that support from fortune, which had so liberally bestowed. The voice followed me, with offers of forgiveness, which were gladly embraced, and I gave the welcome and embraces of my uncle, and my promises of reformation the sun of my life, and returned to the duties of new disgrace. Ungrateful, I was brought to my view the pleasures of a bad become as second nature, I forgot my benefactor and friend. I will not relate the scenes and scenes of my life with which I will suffice it to say, a particular detail would not be the patience of the reader. At the death of my uncle, and repaired to the city where I was honoured with an introduction to the War, through the kind agency of the Major in Congress from Louisiana. I was appointed a Subaltern, and on the 3d day of the appointment of Lieutenant in the 5th, at that time commanded by Col. afterwards consolidated with the 5th Regiment of Col. Miller. Shortly after I received the satisfaction to be appointed Adjutant, which I belonged. An unfortunate accident rendered my situation, for a short time, untenable. Lieut. Burr, of the same regiment, Adjutant, it is supposed through an error subsequently ensued between us, which was fought at Sackett's Harbour, in June, 1812, both wounded. The consequence, Lieut. Burr resigned his commission, and my commencement in the service of my country when the army was disbanded, I was after the army was disbanded, I came to the aid of my dear friend! I met with her who is the cause of my present situation. The ways of virtue, once sweetly gained; and vice succeeds to crime, and is wrapped in guilt. Had I known the woman which Anne Carson was placed, at the disposal of her into the hands of man, she would have proved fruitless. But I was led to believe every assertion which had been made by condition, and point to a momentary vision, and bliss the most ideal! Longing, lingering look behind, when plenty attended my footsteps, I laid the foundation of a useful and noble mind, the subtle and inconstant woman, who forgot the duty to her husband, and banished her parents which should bind her to her duties before me, clothed in the garb of virtue. I suffered myself to be deceived, and, for a while, thought that nishment, a young man in the crowd was stabbed by one of the dragoons. We have not learnt the cause, for there was not the slightest disorder or confusion. General Dalzell, whose correct discipline has justly excited general approbation immediately ordered the dragoon in confinement. We are happy to learn that the young man is recovering of the wound.

HORRID MURDER.—An account has been received from the mate of the Creole schooner, arrived off Dover from Smyrna, that on his passage two of the crew nailed him up in his cabin, while they murdered Capt. Johnson, and threw him overboard, wrapped up in a square sail. After a considerable confinement he got to speak to the boy, and learned that the two men, of the names of Turner and Smith, had possession of the ship, and were about to murder him (the mate,) whom they had determined to hang; but the boy told him, that himself and a man of the name of Masson were determined to stand by him if he (the mate) would attempt to recover the ship. Soon afterwards the mate was taken upon deck, and had his hands tied, and was made fast to a stanchion. The two mutineers had then possession of about 600 doubloons, which they had taken from the captain's drawers. In the evening they began to quarrel about what should be done with the ship, and the mate contriving to get loose, suddenly seized a musket, which he knew to be loaded, and put it to Smith's ear, while Masson attacked the other, and thus regained possession of the ship, which has passed Dover on her way to Standgate creek, whence the murderers will be brought in custody to London.

THE EFFECTS OF COPPER.—On the 27th ult. at Rossmore Park, (the seat of Lord Rossmore,) two female servants were seized with violent vomiting, acute stitches through the bowels and chest, convulsive fits, great fullness of blood in the head, and redness of the eyes; at the same time, the feet and legs as cold as marble, with green foetid discharges from the bowels, and a sense of sinking into the ground. Under these circumstances, his Lordship dispatched a messenger to Monaghan, for Dr. McDowall, who, on seeing them, instantly mentioned they had taken copper; but, on the most minute inquiry, the cook (who was one of the persons indisposed) declared there had been nothing dressed in copper for a length of time; however, the doctor was so decided in his opinion, that he directed his treatment according to the opinion he had given, and they both perfectly recovered. After the cook got well, she acknowledged that she had boiled some red curtains in a pan, and let them remain in it to be cooled till the following morning, of which a pye was made that they had eaten. A young lady in the family tasted it, who was very slightly affected. It is hoped this will act as a caution to cooks boiling acid fruits in copper, and letting them cool in the pan.
