

done, without injury to the grain, under any sheds, erected with judgment on dry piles, thatched in a rough way with straw, or contrivances, which should effectually wet, but admit the air freely, and be easily withdrawn occasionally, to give the grain of fine weather, and easily raised again, if necessary. Perhaps large, empty, sufficiently harvest the ears thus cut off, lead and attended to. When the grain is sufficiently dry, it would be housed, and so on. It is not imagined that the reaper may find difficulty in cutting the wheat in the manner the farmer might, if he pleased, reap it in the same way, and then decapitate it, for an unnecessary lumber and incumbrance which a sufficiency of room for the ears, be supplied. He could also bring the same way, the wheat that is already in the field.

able and expence of providing the sheds, which might be necessary, would be, according to this plan; and possibly the grain of an inferior quality—supposing this inferior grain obtained on these terms, in the total loss of it; and it is now apprehended to be the fate of that proportion of it to which the same process are intended to apply.

process, (if it is at all practicable,) should be regulated to pay the farmer well, might, at this family from starvation. Even if the grain is not of that inferior quality, which, in the end, would be thrown to fowls and pigs, surely in the event of a calamitous failure, now so seriously apprehended, such grain would become most valuable.

might be treated in the same way. The process, whether the ears of wheat might be preserved, in kilns, in the west of Ireland, are treated precisely in the same way.

In a pleasure in laying the following Office before the Public. It is highly recommended by the Commissioners of Excise—it is most beneficial, and at this moment most necessary to the country at large.

244
The regulations having been lately made for the relief of Inland Excise and Taxes, by the Commissioners for drying corn, for permission to dry raw corn, the public are hereby informed that they are at liberty to do so, whether the sheaf or thrashed, the law not providing to the contrary: By Order of the Commissioners,
GEO. WALLER.

—At this period of Agricultural peril it is to us to recommend to farmers the use of saving corn. We know that the corn has been tried, and has succeeded. One gentleman of this city, (Waterford), with land of his own, has brought in his corn in the straw, and has a kiln. If an objection be made on the expense that may attend this process, it is as corn in the straw, it might be the ears which may be saved apart, and either so delicate nor so valuable, may be the natural chances of safety. It should not be forgotten that in the present scarcity of straw, the effect of an immediate demand for the article, it is likely enough to pay for its own preservation.

The Office at Milan has published a part of the works of Dionysius Halicarnassus, which is a singular good fortune, discovered in a manuscript, in the Ambrosian Library, at least nine books of Roman Antiquities, of one hundred and seventy years of age, from the year 313, to the 485 of Rome. The works contain the wars against the Gauls, the Veii, and the Carthaginians, in detail. Those books contain, especially one from Camillus, the Censor; another from Fabricius, addressed to the King of Epirus; and the reply of this Magistrate.
