 This Institution has most imperious claims on the benevo- lence of the Public—the number of People afflicted with diseases of various kinds, and who cannot be accommodated in the Hospitals, have no other resource for advice and me- dicine than the Dispensary, the number of applicants is greater than at any period ever known, and it is almost unnecessary to say, how painful it must be to the Govern- ment to send them away unrelieved, which they must however re- luctantly do, if a liberal subscription is not immediately entered into, for its support—To the exertions of Mr. Robt.
