

“Scattery, Dec. 18,

Blowing a heavy gale of wind these 24 hours past, able from S. W. to W. 3 p. m. The William & James, Cunningham, Glasgow, arrived yesterday. In the Roads—His Majesty's Ship Cyrus, Captain ...

The mail which was dispatched from this City, yesterday, for Cork, Mallow, Doneraile, Charleville, &c. the bags from Dublin for these places, were robbed between Charleville and Groom, by some ruffians, beat the post-man severely. In the course of the last week, several petty robberies were committed in the town of Belfast, on shopkeepers, particularly going into such as were without any one in them, and going off with any thing they could lay hold on. A practice has been carried on in this city, for some time past, of breaking out panes in the shop windows, and taking articles out—last week, two shops in Patrick street, one in Rutland street, and another in George's street, were plundered in manner.—We would recommend that shopkeepers should lattice their windows, or else remove all articles of value from within their reach, as the present dark evenings are favourable to the purposes of those juvenile depredators.

On the night of Tuesday last, an attack was made on a postman from Tullow to Dublin, by an armed party, but he escaped by the fleetness of the horse which he rode. On Friday morning, a fire broke out in the chandlery and on stores of Messrs. Morgan and Reeves, at the rear of a street, Cork, which threatened destruction to the adjacent buildings.—The attendance of the fire engine of the insurance Company, and several persons belonging to the respectable establishment, however, succeeded in suppressing the fire.

On Wednesday se'night, a pawnbroker at Belfast, was arrested, before the superintendent magistrate, of having stolen a soldier's shirt, (part of his regimental necessaries) and sentenced in the penalty of £5. Thomas Burrowes, was sentenced in a like penalty for having received a regimental article from a deserter. The mortal remains of the late Lord Viscount Boringdon, parent to the Earl of Morley, have been brought over on board, and interred with all funeral solemnities, at St. Mary, Plymouth, attended by a vast concourse of respectable characters.

A new apparatus has been fitted up in America for making printing paper, by which a sheet can be made of any length—This is one of the latest improvements of the art, and shews how rapidly the Yankees are following our steps. A man was, on Friday, tried in the Court of Exchequer, wherein Mr. H. G. Grady, attorney, was the prosecutor, and Mr. James Magee, proprietor of the paper, was the defendant. It was for an advertisement purporting to be a notice of plaintiff's creditors. It had been sent through the penny post, with a pound note, and the expense. The defendant used all diligence to prevent the fabrication. Verdict for the defendant, £5.

A remarkable intense fog enveloped London the Friday morning. It was impossible to discern more than a few yards distance, and at noon it was necessary to have recourse to candle light. The scarcity of provisions at Martinique appears to be getting apprehended. A woman, named Booby, has just been convicted of a horrible parricide. It appears that she had attempted for a long time to shorten the life of her husband (who was eighty years old) by every refinements of ill-treatment. At last her impatience resorted to direct means, and she poisoned him in his food. The appearance of this wretch, instead of having the characteristics of brutality, is described as peculiarly interesting. She is of the middle size, with a countenance of mingled sweetness and elegance, with a softness of innocence and openness, a modest demeanour, and a captivating voice; her age about thirty.—Her sentence is condemned to die.—Paris paper.

A duel took place in the Gravel walk, at Bath, on the 3rd inst., between Captain A. and Surgeon B., when the latter gentleman was wounded. The seconds then interferred, and the difference was settled.

ADDRESS AND APPEAL OF THE ROMAN CATHOLICS OF IRELAND, To their Protestant Brethren of the United Kingdom of Great Britain & Ireland, As Read to the Catholic Board, and Proposed for Adoption by JENAS MACDONNELL, Esq. on Thursday the 4th Instant, and which was referred to a Committee to consider and report thereon. (Continued from our last.)

It was not unreasonable for us to expect, that such solemn assurances of loyalty and renunciations of the imputed doctrines, would have removed all the grounds of alarm. But though every candid mind was satisfied, still there were found many persons to renew those offensive imputations. There was but the one mode left to sustain them, after so unequivocal a disclaimer on our part. It was a mode, which nothing short of the most desperate prejudice could sanction; but it was not considered too desperate for the adoption of the opponents of the Catholics of Ireland.

They resolved to get rid of our solemn declarations in the most summary manner; and accordingly, added another more general & more obnoxious imputation, by which they impeached Roman Catholics, generally, and their fellow-subjects, particularly, of a total disregard of the obligations of an oath; thus imputing to the great majority of the Christians, a propensity to the horrid crime of perjury, and to the Legislature itself, the offence of having been accessory to its procurement.

The indecency of this charge was not less glaring than its extravagant falsehood; but the malignant industry of its originators too generally prevailed, and many of our fellow-subjects, inconsiderately, submitted to its influence. (Continued in fourth page.)
