We have, more than once, called the attention of the Magistrates and Gentlemen of this County to the disturbed state of many parts of it, and at each time have we mentioned that only one remedy can be found to check those outrages which now seem so habitual and are almost exclusively our own. In the County of Tipperary, the enormities were so great and manifold, that the eyes of all were fixed upon it, and each day brought forth some new scene of horror—yet a remedy was found, which has checked the mania, and it is now in a comparative state of tranquillity. The Gentlemen of that district are not yet satisfied with its product: they feel the necessity of a further continuance of the operation of so salutary a remedy, and by a late application, have solicited from Government, a renewal of the Peace Preservation Act, which, by its formation, has run out its course there. Not so with us:—when the Insurrection Act had operated so as to produce a little quiet, we were lulled with the prospect, and we sheathed the sword which must now be resorted to again with rigour and determination. These observations are drawn from us, as a prelude to one of those acts of violence and brutality, which are committed in this neighbourhood, and of which the following is a lamentable ensample:

DREADFUL OUTRAGE AND MURDER.

Yesterday morning, at three o'clock, a party of men exceeding twenty, well armed, knocked at the door of Mr. Christopher Sparling, a respectable householder of the village of Patrick's-Well, in this county, and demanded a poor stranger who had taken up his lodging there, in the capacity of a School-master.—The demand was resolutely refused, on which the ruffians broke in the windows and entered the house; they then committed every description of violence, broke the furniture, beat Sparling his man-servant and the school-master, in a most cruel manner, and even the females did not escape their brutality. A young man named Samuel Cross, who had been on a visit at Sparling's, in endeavouring to keep the door of the room where he slept, was shot through the head, of which he instantly died.

This most dreadful outrage has aroused the feelings of the Gentry, and accordingly yesterday, several Magistrates, with Major-General O'Loughlin, attended at Patrick's-well, where depositions were received which we trust may lead to the apprehension of the perpetrators.

An Inquest was held on the body of Cross, by Arthur H. D'Estere, Esq. Coroner, and an intelligent Jury, when a verdict of wilful murder, was returned.—Surgeon Graydon attended professionally.

Cross was an inhabitant of this city, between 20 and 21 years of age—his body was last night brought to his afflicted parents in William-street, where they lately commenced business. We regret to find that the wounds which Mr. Sparling has received, are of an alarming nature.

We forgot to state, that Sparling made a most determined resistance, and finding that a yeomanry musquet which he had would not go off, he beat two of his assailants with the stock of it, in such a manner that they were taken out of his house by their comrades, and blood traced on the road they went, for a very considerable distance.

The night of the above outrage, several notices of an illegal tendency, were posted on farmer's doors, in the neighbourhood of Patrick's-well,
