 amiable, interesting, and accomplished woman, fell a victim to an imperious and inflexible sense of maternal duty. During the dangerous and protracted illness of two beloved children, so unceasing was her anxiety, so unremitting her attention, and her devotion to their interests so fervent, as to call forth the involuntary tribute of silent admiration, while they awakened the most serious apprehensions for her safety, and notwithstanding every remonstrance, she continued to persevere in these exertions, till exhausted nature
